Yankees Win 4th Game, 7-4, in 10th, Take Series

Cincinnati Errors Make New York Team First in History With 4 Straight Victories

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 8.—Cincinnati's Reds made a miserable mess of the ninth and tenth innings today and the New York Yankees made history. On a succession of sour notes that startled the gaze and stilled the tongues of what had been a wild, howling mob of 32,794 Cincinnati fans, the Reds collapsed ingloriously and the World Series ended in a four-straight triumph for the Yankees.

First team in World Series annals to cop four consecutive pennants with four straight World Series championships, the Yankees moved to victory today behind a grist of Cincinnati errors. Beaten, 4 to 2, as the game entered the ninth inning, the Yankees snatched a 7-to-4 victory from a dolorous demonstration by the Reds that followed.

On the brink of their first triumph in this World Series, seemingly stemming at last the fearful Yankee assault, the Reds were seized with the jitters. The team that hadn't committed an error throughout the series suddenly became pathetically inept in the field. Five Yankee runs filtered through a Cincinnati defense suddenly gone bush league.

Myers Fumbles Throw

The finger of shame points emphatically in the direction of Shortstop Billy Myers in Cincinnati tonight. It was Myers who fumbled a throw to second base in the ninth and inspired two Yankee runs that tied the score at 4-4. And it was Myers who muffed a ground ball in the tenth that led to the decisive Yankee run.

Four Cincinnati errors were tossed into those last two innings as the 32,794 sat in shocked silence at the startling turn of events. Scarcely less blameable for the debacle was Catcher Ernie Lombardi, who dropped two balls at the plate while Yankee runs scored. And a guilty party also was Right Fielder Ival Goodman whose outfield muff led to the last two Yankee runs.

For the Reds it was a dismal rout of their own making. Confronted with a doubleplay ball off Dickey's bat, which, if handled cleanly, would have ended the game in a 4-3 victory for the Reds in the ninth, Myers dropped a throw from Second Baseman Lonnie Frey. Thereafter the Yankees figuratively made monkeys of the Reds, with Joe DiMaggio adding insult by scoring from third base in the tenth while big Lombardi, in his disgust at dropping a relay from the outfield, made no motion to retrieve the ball lying only 6 feet away until it was too late.

Yankees Again Outhit

Again today the Yankees were outhit, 11 to 7. But again today the Yankees were hitting home runs. Charley Keller and Bill Dickey knocked balls over the fences to set the Yankees up in a 2-0 lead in the seventh, despite the fact that Paul Derringer, even after the inning ended, was pitching 3-hit ball.

It began as a duel between Derringer and Oral Hildebrand, the Yankee right-hander who was procured from the Browns last winter. For four innings, Derringer didn't allow a hit and the pair found themselves in a scoreless deadlock. But at the end of the fourth, Hildebrand was forced to retire with a lame back, and Steve Sundra took over the Yankee pitching.

Cincinnati hopes were riding almost completely with Derringer to-

254,000 Put In Private Jobs; Wages to Rise

Minimum Increases To 30c This Month; Benefit Claims Drop

Striking increases in the number of private job placements by public employment agencies and a sharp decrease in the total seeking work through those agencies were reported officially yesterday.

At the same time there came a reminder from the Wage and Hour Division that the national minimum wage for millions under the wage-hour act increases from 25 to 30 cents an hour this month, while the maximum work-week is shortened from 44 hours to 42.

The Social Security Board reported an all-time record of 254,000 job placements in private industry in August, 34 per cent higher than in August, 1938, with total placements, public and private, numbering "nearly a third of a million."

Benefit Claims Drop

At the same time there was a drop of more than 28 per cent in claims for benefits received by State unemployment compensation agencies.

While applications for work received during the month reached nearly 1,333,000, which was 14 per cent more than in July, the board said "the substantial gain in placements reduced the active file of persons seeking work through the public employment offices to 5,800,000, the lowest level since December, 1937."

Virginia, North Carolina and the District of Columbia ranked high in the number of job placements. Virginia's total was 9,718, of which 6,793 were in private work. The latter figure was an increase of 116 per cent over that for July. North Carolina, with 13,503, of which 9,528 were in private work, showed a gain of 142 per cent over the previous month. Dies Inquiry Spy Files Are Raided

Special Investigation Ordered of Locals Formed by Reds In D. C. Schools

By Samuel Stavisky,
Post Staff Writer

The House Committee on Un-American Activities last night made two startling revelations. They were:

A special investigator will be brought into Washington to seek out the facts behind a "genuine" Communist Party annual report that Communist locals have been organized among school teachers here.

Committee offices were broken into and its espionage files, containing evidence implicating persons in the Navy and Army, searched and examined.

An aide to the House Committee said a special inquiry would be made in the District schools as a result of the committee's seizure of a report in a raid on the District Communist offices last Thursday. Martin Chancey, secretary of the District Communist Party, was said to have admitted the report was "genuine" and written by himself, in an executive session of the committee last week, according to Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas.

Year's Activities Covered

The report deals with many phases of Communist activities in the District last year. One part states:

"Two new locals were organized in the teachers, and a Teachers District Council."

Informed of the statement, several District leaders indicated that the District would start an investigation of its own. It was pointed out that charges of Communist activity among District school teachers had been made in 1935-36-37 House hearings on the "red rider" forbidding the teaching of Communism in schools. The rider went into effect in 1936 but was later repealed.

A public school official said that if the House Committee would dig up more detailed evidence, an investigation would undoubtedly be made. He pointed out that the Communist report did not identify the teachers as public school instructors.

Citizens Seek Information

Harry N. Stull, vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, predicted that the federation would contact the Dies Committee for further information and if the charge was supported, it would demand ouster of the teachers who are Communist Party members.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen commented that the School Board "ought to look into the matter."

Disclosing the raid on his own files, Representative Dies expressed the fear that leaders of a spy ring under investigation might have learned which of its agents were under surveillance and possibly might have stolen some of the documents.

The committee file rooms, located on the fifth floor of the old House Office Building, were entered sometime between 1 a. m. and 9:30 a. m. yesterday. A window was smashed and glass scattered over the floor. Below the window, which faces the inner court, a 4-foot ledge runs around the court. Police believe the intruder reached the ledge

Roosevelt, Vestrymen Meet To Thank King for Gift of Bible

By International News Service

Hyde Park, N. Y., Oct. 8.—Gift of a handsome Bible commemorating last summer's visit to Hyde Park of the King and Queen of England today inspired a meeting of the vestrymen of President Roosevelt's Episcopal parish here to draft a formal expression of appreciation.

As senior warden of St. James Church, the President presided over the meeting which decided that the Rev. Frank R. Wilson should hold special services with the Bible two weeks hence, when Mr. Roosevelt next returns to his family home.

Gilt-edged and bound in black morocco, the 10 by 12 St. James version sent by Their Majesties first was brought to Hyde Park two weeks ago by the President. By agreement it was taken back to the Library of Congress in Washington, where a glass-covered case is now being made for it.

The vestrymen voted that the Bible should be placed on the lecterne every June 11, the date on which King George and Queen Elizabeth worshipped in the ivy-covered church. Except for very special occasions the Bible will be kept in a safe in Hyde Park Village. President Roosevelt and Gerald Morgan were directed to draw up a letter of thanks to Their Majesties.

Sir Alan Lascelles, secretary to the King, addressed the following letter to Mr. Wilson in dispatching the gift:

"I am commanded by the King to send you the accompanying Bible, which His Majesty is anxious to give to St. James Church, Hyde Park. The King and Queen hope that it may be kept in your church as a memento of the occasion on which Their Majesties attended services there."

King George Expects 'Long, Arduous' War

Tells Fleet to Steel Itself; London Presses Soviet Trade Pact

By W. M. Chaplin
International News Service Writer

London, Oct. 8.—A message from King George VI telling the British Navy its task "may be long and arduous" tonight capped a series of developments, all of which clearly indicated the Allies remain determined to wage a finish fight, despite Adolf Hitler's peace bid.

Although the British and French are expected to counter the Fuehrer's Reichstag proposals with a statement of their minimum peace conditions, it was increasingly evident they do not believe Hitler's Friday speech offered any real basis for peace negotiations.

Soviet Pact Sought

In addition to the King's significant message, addressed to the commander in chief of the British Home fleet after His Majesty returned from a secret two-day visit with the warships, other signs of preparations for a protracted war included:

Reports of diplomatic moves for a trade arrangement between Britain and Soviet Russia that would help offset the Soviet-German accord and weaken Germany's counter-blockade against the Allies.

Revelation that the British army is now nearing 1,000,000 men as part of a long-range program to develop a pool of 10,000,000 soldiers throughout the empire.

Convoy Meets Iroquois; Position Withheld by U. S.

The Navy announced yesterday that the liner Iroquois has been met by a Naval convoy to see her safely home.

Officials would not disclose the position of the liner which the German naval command had advised would be sunk "through a repetition of circumstances which marked the loss of the steamship Athenia."

Naval ships were dispatched to meet her after the head of the German navy, Grand Admiral Raeder, informed the American naval attache in Berlin that, according to information on which he relied, the Iroquois would be sunk when it neared the American coast.

Borah Scores Shipping Ban In Pacific

Plans Fight to Lift Provision Barring U. S. Vessels From Australia, India

By William V. Nessly,
Post Staff Writer

While Administration forces confidently forecast victory today or tomorrow against the move to split the neutrality bill, attention of Senate leaders was turned last night to the forthcoming fight to amend the measure.

The move to lighten restrictions on American shipping carried in the leadership bill drew support of Senator Borah, of Idaho, ranking Republican of the Foreign Relations Committee and a foremost opponent of the Administration effort to scrap the embargo on arms.

Borah declared American ships should be permitted to continue in the Pacific trade with dominions or possessions of the fighting powers, such as Australia and India.

"There is practically no danger whatever, in that trade," he said. "There is not one chance in a thousand that continuation of our shipping in that region will cause trouble. But it will cost us much money and trouble to forbid it.

Holds Pacific Trade Safe

"Where there is danger of our ships being attacked, it is all right to place restrictions. But in the case of the Pacific trade great enterprises would be practically destroyed unnecessarily."

Meanwhile, immediate interest centered in the Senate vote today or tomorrow on the move by Senator Tobey (Republican), of New Hampshire, to recommit the bill to the Foreign Relations Committee to separate the embargo repeal provisions from the other clauses, in order that the latter might be enacted without waiting on the protracted debate on the embargo.

Senator Tobey, in a radio address over the N. B. C. system, last night urged his hearers to wire their Senators in support of his move. He contended there was little possibility of speedy enactment of provisions to keep American ships and travelers out of danger zones unless they were separated from the arms embargo clause, and declared that the action on his motion "may very well mean the difference between our being forced into the war or kept out of it."

Nye Concedes Defeat

At the same time Republican Senator Nye, of North Dakota, a colleague of Borah in the fight to retain the embargo, conceded that the Tobey motion would be defeated.

"I would not be surprised to find many on our side voting against this motion," he told the Associated Press, "simply because they do not want it accepted as a test of strength on the embargo question."

"The vote will demonstrate one thing, however," he added, "and that is that there is nothing in the Administration's argument that these restrictions should be enacted at once to protect our interests. They could have them in a minute if they wanted them, but they are

Dutch Ship Sunk By Explosion in English Channel

London, Oct. 8 (AP).—The Holland-Amerika freighter Binnendijk, which sailed from New York for Amsterdam September 26, sank in flames in the English Channel early today after an explosion.

The crew of 41 was rescued by a British examination ship which answered rocket signals sent up by the 6,873-ton vessel.

Capt. W. Moree, of Rotterdam, said he was on the bridge when a "terrific explosion" put the engines and wireless out of commission. He said he was unable to determine immediately whether the ship was sunk by a mine or torpedo.

Old Austro-Hungarian Monarchy Cited As Pattern Providing Unification of Economies Necessary for Permanence

By Dorothy Thompson

THERE WILL never be peace, order, civilization, security, or prosperity in Europe until naziism is liquidated, liquidates itself or is radically modified. Neither can there be peace and the end of political and economic chaos by the re-establishment of the system that existed after the war and until Hitler began breaking it up. The weakness of the British and French positions is that all the world knows what they are against but does not know what they are for.

Miss Thompson

When Hitler attacks the system that was created in Central and Eastern Europe after the war, he is on safe ground. Even the "international journalistic scribblers," whom he never tires of denouncing, have been critics of that order since the treaties were written.

Among American journalists who have been considered more or less expert on that part of the world, I cannot think of one who has not warned for 20 years that the structure of small, weak and independent states, each with its own currency, tariffs, army and never quite satiated national ambitions, would fall a prey to a renascent Reich.

AMONG JOURNALISTS who have written for the English-speaking world, none is more expert and none more objective than M. W. Fodor, for 20 years correspondent in Vienna and eastern Europe for the Manchester

Italy Pushes Balkan Peace, Own Influence

Friendship Treaties Reported Offered to Yugoslavia, Hungary

By Daniel Delúce
Associated Press Staff Writer

Budapest, Oct. 8.—Italy was reported today to have offered new friendship pacts to Yugoslavia and Hungary, adding to the relief of tension which has dominated southeastern Europe since the war began.

(A Rome dispatch said Italy was reported to be working actively to protect her Balkan and Danubian interests against any extension of German and Russian influence in that area.

(The Hungarian-Rumanian agreement to reduce their frontier forces, and conversations between Yugoslavia and Hungary were regarded by Italians as signs of progress in this effort.

Aim at Balkan Bloc

(In some quarters it was believed Italy was seeking to eliminate differences which have divided the Balkan countries preparatory to formation of a bloc under Italian leadership.

(In these quarters it was suggested the bloc might take the form of a consultative pact and economic agreement similar to the Rome protocols which once bound Austria, Hungary and Italy.)

With Germany occupied on her western front and with Soviet Russia's aims in the Balkans still unknown, diplomats of this section of Europe welcomed prospective collaboration among Italy, Yugoslavia and Hungary as a possible counteraction of the German-Soviet bid for domination in the Balkans.

Speech Spurs Duce

Balkan diplomats said Hitler's speech Friday, declaring Germany and Soviet Russia together would settle all Southeastern Europe's problems, had spurred Italy to action to establish her own posi-

Finns Belatedly Send Envoy to Moscow Talks

Helsinki Insistent That Russia Treat Her as an Equal

By A. Marcus Tollet
Copyright by New York Times.

Helsinki, Finland, Oct. 8.—The Finnish government today appointed former Premier J. K. Paasikivi as its special delegate to Moscow in belated response to Russia's invitation to a Kremlin conference.

The appointment was hailed with general satisfaction because he is regarded as the leading expert on Finno-Russian relations. Paasikivi is leaving immediately.

The Finnish press, which is taking the situation calmly, points out for instance that there is a great difference between the cases of Estonia and Finland, and emphasizes that Finland is not just another Baltic state, but one of the cornerstones of the Scandinavian neutrality bloc. Moreover, Finland, like the Scandinavian states, it is stated, has friendly relations with the United States.

Insists on Equality

Finland wants to increase trade with Russia, but insists on being treated as an equal, especially in view of the existence of a non-aggression pact between both countries.

It is the unanimous press opinion that Finland is firmly resolved to maintain her neutrality and safeguard her integrity, and that all her military measures are aimed solely at this end.

Although it is admitted that Soviet initiative is apt to cause nervousness in Finnish circles, it is asserted the Moscow note is not as harsh as those the Soviet has been sending elsewhere, nor has Finland's foreign minister been summoned to Moscow.

Reports current in Stockholm, however, say the Soviet intends to ask Finland for Hogland Island in

British Down 'Flying U-Boat' In North Sea Aerial Battle

By International News Service

London, Oct. 8.—A big German flying boat was shot down today in a battle between three British planes and two Nazi seaplanes over the North Sea, it was announced tonight.

The second Nazi flying boat sped away after its sister ship fell into the sea, according to the official British communique.

The crew of the German plane was rescued by a British surface vessel, guided by one of the British fliers to where the Germans were clinging to the wreckage of their craft.

Two of the British planes were hit, but neither was damaged and there were no casualties among the British crews.

Disclosure of this engagement gave rise to the belief the German plane may have been one of Adolf Hitler's mystery fleet of "U-boats of the sky" which, according to some rumors, may be the Fuehrer's main weapon in combatting the Allied blockade. The German craft is a type reputedly capable of flying some 2,000 miles with heavy bomb loads.

It was announced also three British planes had surveyed and photographed almost 20 miles of the German Siegfried line from a height of about 100 feet, obtaining a "wonderful series of photographs" of the enemy fortifications.

The aviators reported they had been fired on only once, when they flew over workmen camouflaging a gun with paint.

"Most of all," a flight lieutenant was quoted, "I was impressed by the obviously unfinished state of the Siegfried Line. In many places I saw mounds of freshly thrown up earth and white patches where they had been burrowing in chalky soil. However, I saw no actual work."

Large Scale Shipments at 'Rapid Pace' Are Pledged

Finland Seeks Aid Of Swedes, Nazis To Balk 'Excessive' Moscow Demands

By Witt Hancock,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Oct. 8.—Germany and Russia have agreed to realize their program of economic collaboration "at rapid pace and on a large scale," a Soviet communique said tonight.

"In particular, agreement was reached that the U. S. S. R. should immediately begin supplying Germany materials and Germany filling orders for the U. S. S. R.," the announcement by Tass, official Soviet news agency, said.

The communique was issued following a conference between Vyacheslaff Molotoff, commissar of foreign affairs, and a special German trade delegation headed by Karl Ritter, former German Ambassador to Brazil.

"It was agreed in the course of conversation that the economic program concerning which an understanding had been reached during the last visit of the minister of foreign affairs, Joachim von Ribbentrop, to Moscow, would be realized by both parties at a rapid pace and on a large scale," Tass said.

Finns Turn to Swedes

The conference followed the visit of von Ribbentrop to Moscow September 28 and a friendship agreement announced September 29 to "consult each other as to necessary measures" of co-operation to restore peace and to work out an economic program so that "the volume of the German-Soviet exchange of goods will again attain a high peak."

(The semi-official commentary Dienst Aus Deutschland said on September 29, the day the new German-Russian trade agreement was announced, that besides opening a new source for raw materials, the pact made it possible for part of Germany's far eastern business to be handled over Russian railways. Nazi said German-Russian business likely would reach 1,100,000,000 marks ($440,000,000) annually, almost equal to the 1931 figure, the best trade year for the two countries since the World War.)

Reliable reports tonight said Finland was seeking diplomatic aid of Sweden and Germany to forestall what she feared might be "excessive" demands from Russia.

(Berlin official sources last night displayed coolness to suggestions that Germany might be expected to support Finland.)

Estonian Pact Ratified

The presidium of the Supreme Soviet, Russia's parliament, meanwhile ratified the Estonian-Soviet mutual assistance pact, concluded October 5.

Foreign observers were dubious of what aid Russia might be able to give the Germans except in wheat and timber.

The foreign ministers of Turkey and Lithuania were in Moscow on important missions.

It was expected an agreement would be reached quickly with the Lithuanian foreign minister, Juozas Urbsys, probably giving Russia military and naval concessions and rights of transit such as Estonia and Latvia yielded.

Turk Envoy Still Waits

(The New York Times said last night in a Berlin dispatch that Russia was expected to fortify Lithuania's frontier with Germany. Lithuanian hopes of regaining the country's ancient capital, Wilno (Vilna), seized by Poland and now

OF THEE I SING

One of President Roosevelt's deep convictions is that a Presidential candidate must have what he calls "it" . . . Privately he has a rather definite rating chart on 1940's possibilities. Once he felt sure that Harry Hopkins was the man with the "it."

Harlan Miller

Certain other off-and-on possibilities, he has concluded, definitely don't have "it." At the moment Paul McNutt still seems to stand at the top of his "it" list. Present company, of course, is excepted; and "it" sometimes is powdered tinsel, sometimes diamond dust.

* * * *

Some Representatives who went home till their turn to argue comes around have virtually been chased back to the Capital by amazed constituents.

"What are you doing at home," they demanded, "when such earth-shaking events are happening in Washington?"

"—parade of the 'it' boys"

If the Democrats don't learn to stay in their seats more, they're apt to lose some important test votes.

If there had been a vote, for example, when Senator Tobey brought up his brilliant idea to recommit the neutrality bill, it would have gone 11 to 6 against the Administration, by a quick count of noses from the gallery.

* * * *

So far the truest observation in the embargo debate has been made not on the Senate floor, but in the Senate restaurant:

"Neither the repeal of the embargo nor its retention," said one of the smarter Senators, in a burst of candor as he attacked a deep-dish peach pie, "can make it certain that we will get into the war or that we can stay out."

But that isn't what he says publicly.

* * * *

One of the glamor girls in the gallery who has attracted considerable attention from Senators on the floor is Susan Anthony, grand-niece of the famed reformer. She isn't at all like her great-aunt, superficially at least. Over her brunet head she wears a cute little peaked hood, and on her feet are leather boots that reach more than half way to her knees.

"—the home of the free"

She got into the press gallery one day by passing herself off as a member of the London staff of the United Press. Maybe that's like her great-aunt, whose biography she's writing. I can't see much resemblance between her and the white marble statue of the elder Susan in the basement of the Capitol; Susan 2d seems gayer.

* * * *

In case foreign saboteurs aren't smart enough to think of it themselves, both Coughlin and Borah have now suggested that disapproving foreign nations might dynamite our factories . . .

* * * *

As the recipe for neutrality now stands: Whenever any nation makes war, Americans must recall their merchant ships until their smokestacks rim the republic with a fence of isolation, and then withdraw to the sub-cellars to twiddle their thumbs.

Chemist, Soldier And Poet to Get Roosevelt Medals

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—The Roosevelt Medals for 1939, awarded annually in certain fields associated with Theodore Roosevelt's career, will be bestowed October 27 on George Washington Carver, agricultural chemist; Maj. Gen. Frank R. McCoy, U. S. A. retired, and Carl Sandburg, poet and biographer of Lincoln.

Dr. Carver, colored scientist who in boyhood slavery was bartered for a race horse, won recognition as "one of the foremost agricultural chemists in the country and as a vital factor in the economic and social progress of the South," said the announcement by James R. Garfield, president of the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

Gen. McCoy was honored for his work "in the administration of public office," and Sandburg specifically for his biography of Lincoln. The awards will be made on the eighty-first anniversary of Roosevelt's birth.

Committee chairmen appointed are Harry J. Worsley, program; Charles M. Irelan, finance; James W. Gill, constitution and by laws; William Hewitt, membership; Joseph B. Buscher, entertainment, and Blair Lee, 3d, publicity.

C. I. O. Holds Little Hope for Labor Peace

Leaders Believe Roosevelt Appeal Would Be Fruitless

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Oct. 8.—Leaders of the C. I. O., assembling for their national convention, indicated today they held little hope that any new appeal from President Roosevelt for peace between the two great factions of American labor would bear fruit in the near future.

Some of them expressed the belief their organization would press with renewed vigor its aim to "organize the unorganized," taking advantage of any increase in employment that might result from a war-born demand for American goods and services.

Three of President John L. Lewis' key men spoke skeptically of C. I. O.-A. F. L. peace prospects in addressing the State C. I. O. convention, a forerunner of the national gathering.

Peace Appeal Expected

What prompted their remarks presumably were reports that the national convention would receive a peace appeal from President Roosevelt similar to the one the Chief Executive sent to the A. F. L. convention in Cincinnati.

"We cannot unite on the terms the A. F. L. leaders propose," said John Brophy, C. I. O. national director, "because they involve the destruction of the C. I. O. We cannot revert to the system of internal bickerings in the A. F. L. which kept the American labor movement helpless and ineffective for so long."

Harry Bridges, West Coast C. I. O. director and object of a Labor Department deportation effort, received an ovation from the State convention.

"All the A. F. L. top leadership wants," he said, "is peace based on ficials . . . We want a peace that the desires of a small clique of offwill protect the C. I. O. and the rank and file of the A. F. L."

C. I. O. Vice President Philip Murray asserted the A. F. L. had refused for 25 years to change its attitude toward industrial unionism.

C. I. O. Action Awaited

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Oct. 8.—The American Federation of Labor headed today into a week of convention debate and policy-making expected to define the course of action to be taken by the 4,000,000-member organization during the next year on such issues as war, labor peace, politics and legislation.

What the convention will do with President Roosevelt's latest request for labor unity appears to depend largely on the stand the rival Congress of Industrial Organizations takes on peace at its San Francisco convention opening Tuesday.

In advance of the A. F. of L. resolutions committee reports, all signs indicated the convention would support the New Deal's neutrality revision program and go so far as to urge the Government to mediate Europe's war as soon as the belligerents provided an opportunity.

Some federation union heads predicted the labor war would be carried through the 1940 elections.

Veteran labor leaders have declared the stake in the labor war now was leadership of a united labor movement.

Critical of Relief Act

On the question of national politics, the convention may hear debate on a resolution to indorse the President and the New Deal, but influential leaders said they would try to avoid partisan policy commitment.

Administration policies and agencies, however, are certain to come under fire.

The building trades unions are particularly critical of the 1940 relief act because it left out a requirement for paying the prevailing wage scale to skilled mechanics. They also are concerned about the scope of the antitrust inquiry into the building industry.

The major legislative question will be the A. F. of L.'s future course on obtaining amendments to the national labor relations act to curb the powers of the board.

St. Louis, Seattle and New Orleans were reported getting chief consideration for next year's convention city.

Normandie Stays At Pier, Furnishings Put in Mothballs

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—The Normandie, largest and costliest liner afloat, was packed away in mothballs today.

The 83,423-ton, $50,000,000 French liner—moored at her pier here since her arrival August 28—apparently was to stay for the duration of war.

Fourteen barrels of mothballs were used to preserve her luxurious furnishings, which were crated and packed away. Other equipment has been dismantled.

She has not been painted the dull gray like other belligerent ships that have scooted across the submarine-infested Atlantic. That was another indication she would remain tied up.

About 700 of her crew have returned to France.

Postmasters' Chief Calls Job No 'Pushover'

Smalltown Men More Versatile Than City Workers, He Asserts

No "pushover" is the job of a small town postmaster, according to George Purcell, postmaster at Bloomington, Ind., and president of the National Association of Postmasters, who is here for a convention of the association.

While the Bloomington postoffice handles mail for a population of only 20,000, plus 5,500 students of the University of Indiana nine months of the year, its postmen are versatile beyond the metropolitan standard, he says.

Purcell pointed out yesterday, as he left a committee meeting at the Mayflower Hotel, that a metropolitan foreman of carriers is concerned only with supervising carriers.

Students Prolific Writers

Not so in Bloomington, where the foreman also handles claims and works "on the floor," dispatching and distributing mail.

And there, again, is the University of Indiana. College students are prolific writers, the average writing as many letters as an entire "family unit," Purcell said.

Students also send their laundry home, by parcel post, so that boxes come and go by the thousand every week.

"They're great special delivery letter writers, too," he added. "And on Valentine's and Mother's Day the number of air mail letters really is enormous."

A Postal "Go-Getter"

Purcell finds time to publish a daily newspaper as well as run the postoffice. But he is here chiefly as a postal business "go-getter." At last year's convention he was largely responsible for organizing National Air Mail Week, May 15-21, to publicize air mail by special "pickups" throughout the country. The result was a 50 per cent increase in air letters.

"Why can't we do the same thing with other forms of postal service—rent boxes and insurance, for example?" he asked yesterday.

Attendance of 4,500 postmasters is expected at the convention. Today there will be a meeting of the executive committee at 10 a. m. A reception will be given for Mr. and Mrs. Purcell at the Mayflower from 9 to 10 p. m. President Roosevelt will greet the postmasters in a speech from the south portico of the White House Wednesday. The convention begins tomorrow.

Japanese Free U. S. Goods Held at Two Chinese Cities

The Japanese Embassy announced last night that stocks of American-owned woodoil at Hankow and embroidered merchandise at Swatow had been released "through the good offices of the Japanese authorities concerned in China."

The statement said American varnish manufacturers had "intimated" to the embassy early this year a desire to have 5,000 tons of woodoil shipped to the United States because of dwindling supply and rising prices.

The request for freeing 300 tons of embroidered goods in time for holiday season business was made by the Art Embroidered Linen Importers Association, Inc., the embassy said. It placed the value at 2,200,000 Chinese dollars.

U. S. Economic Policy Is Held Designed to Aid Special Groups

Economic Freedom No Longer Primary Aim of Government, Brookings Report Declares; Labor Trend Cited

Economic freedom has ceased to be the primary aim of the United States Government in its economic policies, while new reliance is being placed on special interest groups, a Brookings Institution report said yesterday.

The simple maintenance and control of free competition have come to be regarded as "less and less adequate to the achievement of social ends," and tend to be replaced by "positive requirements of action . . . imposed on private enterprise," the report stated.

"In many of the newer activities of government there is implicit a diminished valuation of economic freedom as an end in itself."

Study Half Completed

The report is based upon a study of which only half has been completed, conducted by Dr. Leverett S. Lyon, executive vice president of the institution, Dr. Myron W. Watkins and Dr. Victor Abramson.

Although some of the new controls placed upon private enterprise have been designed to regulate business as a whole, the report stated, "the test more and more frequently applied to proposed measures in recent times has been their efficacy to promote the economic security of special interest groups."

The report noted a tendency in official circles to see in "the expression of these partisan interests" the basis for "the formulation of a sound public policy," and added that "these trends . . . raise vital issues for democracy itself."

Labor Policy Reversed

Public policy toward labor has been reversed in the past decade, according to the report, and tends now "even toward the encouragement of concerted action."

"In this respect policy development is in striking contrast with the continuous policy of maintaining competition among business men," the report pointed out.

The "increased assumption of management controls" noted in the study was said to "confront legislators and administrators with problems which are more complicated, more technical, and socially more significant than those with which they have been traditionally concerned." The necessity for foreseeing the consequence of all decisions has thus increased while it has become more difficult to foresee them, the report concluded.

Virginia, D. C. Files Drop

Virginia's active file of those seeking work dropped 9.2 per cent, to 45,507, and the District's was down 3.4 per cent, to 35,993.

Maryland's private job placements increased 6 per cent, with 2,892 out of 3,896 total jobs provided, and her active file of job seekers dropped 8.7 per cent, to 69,360.

Virginia's new claim for unemployment compensation declined 15.3 per cent, to 7,170, in the 30-day period, though the amount of benefits paid went up 2.2 per cent, to $411,214. The District's new claims went up 2 per cent, totaling 1,596, while the amount paid, $104,564, was up 7.3 per cent. Maryland had 8,350 new claims, an increase of 23.1 per cent, and her payments were up 13.6 per cent, to $516,752.

Andrews Ruling

Meanwhile, Elmer F. Andrews, wage-hour administrator ruled that for any work-week beginning before October 24, overtime under the wage-hour act must be paid only if more than 44 hours are worked. Consequently, employers are not required to heed the new 42-hour maximum for the week beginning Monday, October 23. On all subsequent weeks, however, overtime must be paid for all work in excess of 42 hours.

However, it was ruled that the new minimum of 30 cents an hour must be paid for all work after midnight of Monday, October 23.

The decisions were given in answer to many inquiries from all parts of the country. It was pointed out that the pay periods of "a large number" of concerns will end on Wednesday or Thursday, October 25 and 26, and it was largely for them that yesterday's rulings were compiled.

U. S. Wealth 322 Billions

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—The national wealth of the United States in 1937 was estimated at $322,000,000,000 today by the National Industrial Conference Board.

This compared with $353,000,000,000 at the postwar peak in 1929 and the depression low of $287,000,000,000 touched in 1934.

The board said the per capita wealth in 1937 was $2,490, compared with $2,910 at the height of the postwar prosperity in 1929, and $2,263 in the 1934 depression year.

The board is a research organization supported by contributions from private business enterprises.

Auto Trust Trial Will Begin Today

South Bend, Ind., Oct. 8 (AP).—The trial of the General Motors Corporation, three G. M. C. finance companies and 19 officials on antitrust charges is to begin in Northern Indiana Federal Court tomorrow.

The defendants are accused of forming a combination in restraint of trade in financing automobile sales in violation of the Sherman law.

The Ford Motor Co., the Chrysler Corporation and their car financing affiliates were indicted with General Motors last May, but signed consent decrees agreeing to abide by the court's decision in the G. M. C. case.

Four Tobacco Concerns Face Trust Charges

FTC Alleges Control Over Retail Prices, Discriminatory Terms

By the Associated Press

Four tobacco manufacturing companies were charged with discrimination in prices and services in complaints announced yesterday by the Federal Trade Commission.

Alleging violations of the Robinson-Patman act, the complaints named P. Lorillard Company, New York; Brown and Williamson Tobacco Corporation, Louisville; R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem, and Larus and Brother, Inc., Richmond.

The FTC alleged that the companies (1) discriminated in prices between different purchasers, (2) paid compensation for services and facilities to some customers and not to others, and (3) supplied certain services to some but not others.

The FTC alleged that the companies "have established the relationship of seller and customer between them and retail tobacco distributors," and "have in such manner control over the prices at which their products are sold by the retail distributors to consumers."

Discrimination was charged in the distribution of free goods, allowances to vending machine operators, extension of 60-day, two per cent, discount credits to some retailers, and payment of compensation to chain stores and others for the use of such facilities as counter and window displays.

400 Men Slated To Strike Today On 2 U. S. Projects

Four hundred steel workers and truck drivers were slated to walk out on construction jobs at the Social Security Board and Federal Office buildings today.

Two hundred members of the Reinforced Steel Workers Union will strike, Arthur Crory, business agent, said, because of failure of the union and Concrete Contractors Association to reach an agreement on wage demands.

Walkout of 200 members of the Drivers, Chauffeurs and Helpers Union is scheduled in an effort to settle a jurisdictional dispute with the Operating Engineers Union on the project.

The meeting is designed to act as a clearing house for information on what the different civic, educational, religious, home demonstration or garden associations are doing. Each participating organization has been asked to outline its work and its aims for the coming year.

Women Ask Fund For Defense Needs

By the Associated Press

The Women's National Committee to Keep the United States Out of War made public yesterday a letter to Chairman Taylor (Democrat), of Colorado, of the House Appropriations Committee, urging him immediately to initiate legislation for a deficiency appropriation to provide money for certain national defense needs.

The letter referred to President Roosevelt as having said he intended to direct expenditure of money for increased housing and medical facilities for the national defense because Congress had failed to make proper provision. It asked whether the appropriations committee "is sitting idly by and permitting taxpayers' money to be spent without the authorization of Congress."

Fate of 6,000 American Poles Still Unknown

U. S. Envoy Held by Russians 3 Weeks Is Freed Through Kiev

By the Associated Press

Bucharest, Oct. 8.—William Morton, of Watsonville, Calif., who served as United States Vice Consul in Warsaw, reached Bucharest today after being detained by the Soviet army almost three weeks.

Morton came from Kiev where he was taken by Soviet authorities after the Russian occupation of eastern Poland.

He said a guard was placed outside his door each night at Kiev, but he was well treated by the Russians who promised to send along his auto which he abandoned at Zaleszczyki, on the Rumanian-Polish frontier, when a Russian tank column took the town September 17.

When Morton left Zaleszczyki for the Russian interior, only three foreigners were left there, all European newspaper reporters. They were planning to go to Moscow to obtain permission to leave Russia.

Morton arranged for two Americans, Cyeslaw Agonis, of Shenandoah, Pa., and Bernard Mazur, of Buffalo, to go to Moscow for eventual departure from the country. They represent a religious organization with headquarters at Buffalo. When the Russians took them into custody they had walked 200 miles from Lwow, Poland, toward the Rumanian frontier, seeking to escape the advancing Germans.

Morton was reticent aoout conditions in Poland but said he saw no widespread Polish-Soviet fighting during the occupation. He reported long lines of exhausted Polish prisoners were marching into Russia.

The fate of 6,000 Polish-Americans he was trying to get out of Poland when the war started was unknown, Morton said. Morton had been assigned to Brest-Litovsk to work on the refugee problem but German bombings scattered inhabitants of the city before he could send more than 15 out of the country, he explained.

Morton said he believed many children of naturalized Americans, whose citizenship is in doubt, still were in Poland.

Count Albert Dzieduzyski, a Princeton-educated Pole who worked in the American consulate at Warsaw, accompanied Morton to Bucharest.

Italy Intends To Continue Neutral Efforts

Copyright by New York Times.

Rome, Oct. 8.—Should England and France reject Fuehrer Hitler's peace proposals, Italy will continue with renewed vigor her efforts to build and maintain a "neutral bloc," according to circles close to the government. In other words, her policy remains unchanged and she is seeking to circumscribe the present conflict as much as possible.

Virginio Gayda today made clear Italy's aim in an editorial published in the Voce d'Italia.

"Italy," he said, "is today outside the conflict. Today through the influence of her attitude she is working to circumscribe it, with happy results already evident in Greece and in the relations between Hungary and Rumania."

Meantime, Italy is leaving nothing undone to induce England and France to accept Hitler's peace offer. Every editorial today appeals to Paris and London to give fullest consideration to the German proposals before making a decision and warns that on their answer depends the fate of millions of people.

Deep concern is occasioned by the negative reaction already shown in the French and English newspapers.

Paris Skies Quiet, Parisians Returning

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 8.—As the military operations lag after five weeks of war, and the sky above Paris remains quiet, thousands of Parisians returned to the city which they had evacuated at the beginning of the conflict.

Except for the blackouts at night, which, incidentally, are much less black than in Warsaw during the bombing of that town, Paris gradually regains its normal aspect.

CCC to Help Develop 35 Wildlife Refuges

Development of 35 national wildlife refuges will be undertaken by CCC units, Director Robert Fechner announced yesterday. The camps will work under supervision of the Biological Survey.

Operations will include construction of water impoundment works and gathering, storing and replanting of vegetation for wildlife food and cover. Camp enrollees will also aid development of the areas by construction of trails, roads and bridges, erection of fences and boundary markers and construction of service buildings.

Great Charmers of History to Be Studied By Special Class of Federal Employes

Frenchwoman Will Teach Course on Famous Women

Something new is coming into the lives of a group of Government workers today. For many Mondays they are going to be regaled with information about the great charmers of history, imparted by an animated Frenchwoman.

The Department of Agriculture Graduate School lists the course matter-of-factly as "Famous Women of History." Miss Mary Sabarth, the lecturer, insists that she will be "quite objective" in her treatment of the techniques by which these women wielded their influence.

"If my listeners learn how to do it, it's just as important for them to learn how not to do it," Miss Sabarth parried, for not all the heroines had happy endings.

"The course will help to bring women away from their every-day lives," she explained

The course is open to men and women. Last year, it was an all-feminine class. Miss Sabarth agreed it would be more interesting if a few men signed up, and they might find it diverting.

"Some of the women in this course have been misjudged in flippant and cheap biographies. But I have read worthwhile biographies in several different languages to get at the truth about these women, and the course presents the information in a serious objective way," Miss Sabarth declared.

"Some of the women, when they found their beauty fading, started into politics to keep their power—and a number of them failed," Miss Sabarth said. The course will indicate how and why they failed.

At the opening of the course from 5 to 6 p. m. today after registration in Room 1031 of the South Building, Miss Sabarth will deal with Lucrezia Borgia and the Borgia Family.

The course will include Mary Stuart, Queen of Scotland; La Marquise de Pompadour, Madame du Barry, Catherine the Great of Russia, Marie Antoinette, Lady Hamilton, Empress Eugenie. Peggy O'Neill, called the "American Pompadour," is among the 30 weekly lectures, continuing to May 20.

Miss Sabarth was originally from Alsace-Lorraine. She has taught in Constantinople. After all her research work into the stories of the famous women, she still thinks of them as "living fairy tales."

French Push Toward Trier, Line's Weak Spot

Remich, Luxemburg, Oct. 9 (U.P.).—Entrenched German positions were attacked tonight by French forces attempting to push in the direction of Trier (Treves), believed by the French general staff to be one of the weakest links in the Siegfried Line.

The fighting, which began at 8 p. m., was a resumption of a battle which ended at dawn. The skirmish eased after an hour of heavy fighting between outposts.

The silence of Friday and Saturday ended last night at midnight as heavily armed patrols clashed in the Borg Forest and continued close-range fighting, in some cases hand to hand, throughout the night.

Artillery was not used, as the troops were too close for safe firing, but deadly trench mortars were brought into play. Their thunderous explosions punctured the intermittent rattle of machine guns and rifles.

Exercise Barred, Man Makes Fiddle Of 1,960 Matches

Winchester, Va., Oct. 8.—John H. Colvin, 233 Kern street, was at a loss to know what to do when the doctors told his to forego strenuous exercise until he remembered hearing of a man who made a table of matches.

Then Colvin got busy, not with a table but with a violin as his goal. Yesterday, he proudly exhibited not only a violin, modeled on a Stradivarius, but a case, both made of matchsticks glued together and waterproofed with shellac and varnish.

The violin has been commended by local musicians as having excellent tone. It was made of 1,960 matches. The case was made of 1,620 matches. The violin was made in spare time during eight weeks, the case in half that time.

Delivery Boy Robs Self to Get Married

Detectives yesterday went out to a Georgia avenue drugstore to investigate a holdup report and found a 19-year-old colored delivery boy filled with agitation. He said he had taken change for $20 on a delivery and was robbed of that and $5 of his own. While one detective talked with him, another searched the delivery truck and found $25 hidden inside.

The boy admitted, they said, that he had held up himself. He wanted to get married today.

From Soup to Nuts; A Whole Handful of Screws Loose

The War of the Sexes for Dopey Doings And Dipsy Doodles Waxes Faster and Furiouser Over a Dizzified Countryside

By Gladwin Hill,
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 8.—The well-known war between men and women waxed faster and furiouser last week, with the men gaining quite a lead—

A West Chester, Pa., man got a divorce because his wife burned up his fishing license . . . A Camden, N. J., man asked for a divorce on the ground that his wife five times had introduced a man as "the boy friend," and each time it was a different man . . .

An Alfred, Me., man asked for a divorce because his wife always laughed at other men's jokes, but never at his . . . A Worcester, Mass., man got a divorce because his wife bombarded him with religious pamphlets . . .

An 84-year-old Fincastle, Va., man complained that married life had cost him $200 a day, because he gave his bride a $600 property settlement and she left him after three days . . . A Los Angeles woman got a divorce because her husband bored peepholes in the walls of their home to spy on her . . . And—a Lebanon, Ohio, woman bequeathed her daughter a rolling pin . . .

Dizzy doings hither and yon—A movie comedian delivered a sermon in a Pittsburgh church . . . A New York college girl listed her hobby as "meditation" . . . A 64-year-old Bellows Falls, Vt., man came to the World's Fair on a gasoline scooter . . .

A woman bank cashier in Sumner, Mo., argued a bandit into settling for $100 . . . Arrested for not having any pants on, a Spartanburg, S. C., man told police he had given them to another fellow "because he needed them worse than me" . . .

A New York man asked to change his name from Oscar, because it was the name of a dog in a comic strip and on the radio the name of a flea . . . Through a bookkeeping error, the State of Minnesota claimed ownership of the International Falls city hall for nonpayment of taxes . . . the State of Connecticut ruled that beavers have a right to "exercise their natural skill and ability" in building dams . . .

An Indiana man pushed a friend 80 miles from Newcastle to Lewisville in a wheel chair to pay off a baseball bet . . . A Peoria woman won the Illinois liars' contest with a story about jacking up an automobile with yeast . . . Some Wilkes-Barre, Pa., highway workers varied the custom of throwing old hats into the last wet cement on a project by throwing in their foreman.

A 3-year-old Paterson, N. J., girl, who fell off a third-floor porch, nonchalantly grabbed a telephone wire and held on until help arrived . . . A year-old Grand Rapids, Mich., girl swallowed three pieces of razor blade with no serious effects . . . and—

When a year-old Jersey City, boy gasped "Daddy" for the first time, Daddy was so surprised he swallowed his toothbrush.

China to Gain, Says Missionary

Richmond, Va., Oct. 8 (AP).—Dr. M. T. Rankin, secretary to the Orient for the Southern Baptist conference, said here that although no "definite victory" for China appears probable in the Sino-Japanese struggle, "I think that it is likely that China in the end will come out of this a reborn nation."

Dr. Rankin, who returned from Shanghai in late summer to spend a year in the Foreign Mission Board headquarters here, will give a detailed report of mission work in China to the board Wednesday.

E. W. Fritz Becomes Legion Post Leader

Second Division Post, No. 28, American Legion, yesterday installed E. W. Fritz as commander, Ray L. Falge as senior vice commander, and Andre Merle as junior vice commander and publicity officer. Frank Grimn continued as post adjutant.

Representatives of the District Department officiated. The Honor Guard and two Gold Star Mothers attended the ceremonies.

Goodwill Chapel Service

The Rev. Robin Gould, pastor of Francis Asbury Methodist Church, will speak at the Goodwill Industries Chapel service at 8:15 a. m. today. The Rev. Mr. Clark Fourcey, of the Nonsectarian Tabernacle, will speak at similar services on Wednesday.

Lady Gibbs Dies

London, Oct. 8 (AP).—Lady Gibbs, wife of Sir Philip Gibbs, British novelist and war correspondent, died yesterday.

Byrd to Address Chamber Session

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 8.—Senator Byrd has accepted an invitation to address the annual meeting of the Charlottesville and Albemarle Chamber of Commerce November 8, at the Monticello Hotel.

As in recent years, a meeting of the board of directors of the chamber at 6 p. m. will precede the banquet. Originally scheduled for October 17, the meeting was postponed by the board of directors.

Baptists Fear Balkan Drive Against Church

Soviet's Foothold in Poland Is Menace, Dr. W. O. Lewis Says

The Red foothold in Poland carries threats of a Russian anti-Christian movement in the Balkans, Dr. W. O. Lewis, executive secretary of the Baptist World Alliance, warned here yesterday.

Addressing a capacity congregation at the National Memorial Baptist Church, Sixteenth street and Columbia road northwest, he pictured a black outlook for Baptist enterprises on the Continent, with hundreds of pastors and other leaders mobilized into military service, and "practically all" of the progress made since the reorganization of European Baptist work in 1920 in danger of being wiped out.

The "monopoly" of the state-controlled church in certain countries was scored by the cleric, who insisted that it was impossible in many cases for Baptists to be "legally born, married, or buried" without special consent.

Conditions in Rumania have improved, he told his audience, the decree which closed 1,602 Baptist churches having been lifted, and "a more liberal spirit now prevailing."

Giving a background of Baptist missionary projects on the Continent, Dr. Lewis pointed out that a young German, J. G. Oncken, laid the foundation for Baptist work in Europe. To familiarize himself self with Protestantism, he mingled among Presbyterians in Scotland, and Methodists and Congregationalists in England, and returned to Germany to begin a Baptist Bible Society. He was baptized in the Elbe River by an American Baptist professor.

In Washington to confer with State Department officials on securing a passport back to the field, Dr. Lewis was introduced by Dr. Gove G. Johnson, pastor, who announced that Dr. George Truett, former president of the Baptist World Alliance, would speak in his church from November 1-9. Dr. Lewis, whose headquarters are in London, spoke last night at Calvary Baptist Church.

Arizona Accident Called Sabotage; Inquiry Is Pushed

Los Angeles, Oct. 8 (AP).—Government agents pushed an investigation today into reports of sabotage aboard the battleship Arizona.

The Los Angeles Examiner said it had learned vital oil lines had been damaged in a manner which, undiscovered, would have ruined the vessel's engines. It added that "certain machinists" were under constant surveillance.

Castle Sees Arms Ban Unimportant

Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 8. (AP).—William R. Castle, former Under Secretary of State, said tonight if the United States is "dragged" into the European conflict "we shall be, when the war is over, only another dictatorship."

Addressing the Bishop's Men, leading laymen of the Rochester Episcopal Diocese, he termed the arms embargo issue "of little importance," explaining the Germans "are just as likely to torpedo cargoes of foodstuffs or cotton as of arms and munitions."

Price to Complain To ICC on Buses

Elimination of through bus service from Bethesda to Washington will be the subject of a formal complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission today by George H. Price, chairman of the public utilities committee of the East Bethesda (Md.) Citizens Association.

The complaint will be made against the Capital Transit Co., which plans to abandon its through service November 1.

Nomination Meeting

A meeting to nominate officers of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will be held tomorrow at 8.30 p. m. at the Twelfth Street Y. M. C. A., Dr. C. Herbert Marshall, president of the District branch, announced last night. The annual election will be November 14.

Alarm to Be Explained

The automatic alarm for shipboard service to further "safety of life at sea" will be explained by I. F. Byrnes, chief engineer of the Radiomarine Corporation of America, at the meeting of the Institute of Radio Engineers at 8 tonight at Potomac Electric Power Co. auditorium.

Work Is Salvation of South, Says Martha Berry, Now 73

Educator Created Mountain Schools For Poor Children

A little breathless over her seventy-third birthday celebration Saturday, Martha Berry, one of America's great educators, paused yesterday to take stock of a past of devotion to American youth, and a future offering no rest.

Silver-haired, carrying a cane more as a wand than a staff, she rested in the Willard Hotel before a Nation-wide broadcast as "the Woman of the Week" from the stage of the Capitol Theater. She recounted a tale of the old Georgia red clay road that became a roaring modern highway along which 10,000 girls and boys came in search of opportunity.

"Everybody must have trained hands as well as a trained mind," she said slowly. "That's the beginning for my people in the South."

From a log cabin and solely by her own efforts, Miss Berry has built an institution embracing four schools, more than 150 teachers and a present enrollment of 1,200 at Mount Berry, Ga.

"We go all the way from kindergarten through college," she said. "There's no 'hired help.' Everybody works, learns a trade. That's the salvation of the South—to work. It costs no money, only individual ambition, to go through the Berry schools. We have very little endowment, and most of the cost is defrayed by the products students raise or make and sell."

She mused, then smiled: "They told me, 'You can't educate all the poor boys and girls in the South. And I answered, 'But I'll educate all that I can.' I've walked out on a plank of faith, and walked out so far that I can never turn back."

Huge farms operated by the boys supply all the schools' groceries, she explained, but the payment of 160 teachers, is the most difficult problem the institution faces.

Miss Berry has introduced no dazzling theories to modern education. Instead she has planted faith in the value of work and something of her own spirit of courage, against great odds in the lives of her students. She is a spirit rather than a personality, and as a result is amazed when anyone shows interest in her as well as her school.

"Yes, I had a birthday Saturday," she said. "The school was wonderful to me. All 1,200 of us went on a picnic up on the mountain. I was rather weary, and it was restful there in the shade of the trees, with a stream running nearby."

It was of the school, rather than of herself, that she thought again.

"Each student contributed as many pennies as years he was old, to be given to our endowment fund. That was the best birthday gift I could have received."

Johnson Wants U. S. 'Hardboiled' To Belligerents

Baltimore, Oct. 8 (INS).—Under the auspices of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, a crowd of 25,000 heard Gen. Hugh Johnson, former NRA Administrator, urge a "hard-boiled" policy with "absolutely equality of treatment" for all belligerents in the European war.

While he declared he favored repeal of the arms embargo, Johnson asserted that "either to sell or to refuse to sell to the belligerents is neutral, as long as both sides are treated alike."

Johnson asserted Adolf Hitler, Nazi premier, has "bitten off more than he can chew" and that "it is possible that his little gangster bundle party with fox-faced Joe Stalin (Soviet dictator) has about fixed his wagon. He is in bed with a murderer as ambitious, as powerful and as ruthless as he himself."

Kuhn Charges Persecution

Andover, N. J., Oct. 8.—Fritz Kuhn, leader of the German-American Bund, asserted today in an address at Camp Nordland that contributions to the $50,000 cash bail in which he was released yesterday from the Tombs Prison in New York ranged from 50 cents to $3,500 and all came from bund members.

He is to go to trial in a few weeks on an indictment charging embezzlement of $14,548 from the bund treasury. The Germans, he added were "the only race in America that is being persecuted."

Nazis Increase Pressure on Moselle Flank

French Repulse Raids While Planes Scout Over Cologne, Bonn

By Henry C. Cassidy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Paris, Oct. 8.—German troops increased pressure today against French advance posts on the extreme northern flank of the Western Front where the French have established strong positions to cover the neutral frontier along the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg.

The French general staff in a communique tonight announced that a series of German "surprise attacks" had been repulsed in that sector east of the Moselle River.

French lines in the region form a salient at least 2 miles within German territory and circle around the hills of the forest of Borg.

French military men consider the wooded heights, which command the Moselle Valley and a highway and railroad which parallel the river, one of the most strategic positions they have captured since war was declared five weeks ago today.

French Operations Expanding

With weather clearing on the northern flank last night, planes again were reported to have taken the air and artillery began shelling anew.

The heaviest artillery duels were located by the French communique to the south and southwest of Saarlouis (Saarlautern) a sector bordering that where French were reported raiding.

The day's activity followed what was officially announced as a "calm night" in which "enemy patrols were repulsed."

French raids were interpreted as a reply to Nazi peace overtures.

Military dispatches reported French operations were expanding, with infantry patrols penetrating deeper into Germany, artillery bombardments increasing in violence and scouting planes lengthening their flights over the Reich.

Planes Scout Cologne

French army activity has been increasing steadily since Friday, the day Adolf Hitler put forth his plan for peace on German terms.

Military dispatches declared French patrols were at work, particularly in the Hornback salient south of Zweibruecken.

The French air force was reported to have executed scouting flights over the important German cities of Cologne and Bonn which are on the Rhine opposite the Belgian and Netherlands frontiers. Both cities are behind Aachen (Aix-la-Chapelle), where the French have reported detecting German troop concentrations.

One French scout plane failed to return to its base, it was announced, but the rest of the squadrons were said to have made their flights safely.

No Major Offensive Yet

Though activity increased on the Western Front, there still was no sign of a major offensive.

The French high command appeared content to stick to tactics used since the start of operations when troops began filtering into Germany's Saar basin at a minimum expense of men and munitions.

Military observers said this fitted into a general plan of harassing Germany on land and blockading her at sea until her forces should take the initiative in adverse winter weather or the French-British forces complete their armaments for a spring offensive.

The stepping up of local attacks served a political purpose by apparently indicating the French-British Allies intended to continue fighting rather than accept peace on German terms.

26 Communists Seized

Political sources said Premier Daladier had no plans at present for replying directly to Hitler's speech since no formal peace proposal had been received either from Germany or through a neutral power. French looked to Prime Minister Chamberlain's address in the House of Commons Wednesday as the next allied move.

Ex-Deputies in Purge

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 8.—Police in Paris and agents of the National Surety Service in the provinces today began a roundup of former Communist deputies and late tonight announced the arrest of 35.

Nearly all of the former party's most prominent members have evaded capture and are believed to be in hiding somewhere within France.

Among the missing, for whom warrants have been issued, are: Maurice Thorez, former secretary of the party, who is absent without leave from his military unit; Jacques Duclos, vice president of the Chamber of Deputies; Arthur Ramette and Florimond Bonte, chief officials of the newly organized Workers and Peasants Party; Andre Marty, who was active with the International Brigade in Spain, and Gaston Monmousseau, deputy from the Workers district of Saint Denis.

The charge is reorganizing the political group, which had been ordered disbanded.

Dies' Offices Entered and Espionage Files Examined

Offices of the Dies Committee in the old House Office Building were entered early yesterday and espionage files listing names of spy suspects in the Army, Navy shipyards and Government services examined. Picture shows Robert E. Stripling, secretary of the committee, checking files to determine if any data are missing. The hole which was broken to release the latch also is shown through a vacant fifth-floor office.

According to Dr. J. B. Matthews, the committee's research director, besides the espionage files five mail bags filled with documents seized under subpena from Chicago and Washington headquarters of the Communist Party and the American League for Peace and Democracy were in the office. Matthews was unable to say whether any of the documents were missing. Robert E. Stripling, committee secretary, recalled that the offices had been broken into four times last April.

Highlights of the seized Communist Party report on District affairs include:

A discussion of "a small party unit in the G. P. O." (Government Printing Office); of "very excellent comrades in the Street Car Men's Union, the Musicians, office workers, iron workers;" of "just holding our position" among the barbers, retail clerks, and painters; of a "standstill" in the work among Navy Yark machinists. (Committee Secretary Stripling said Navy Intelligence and Navy Yard officials would be given detailed evidence of Communist activities in the Navy Yard.)

Little Progress in Unions

The party is making little progress in both the A. F. L. and C. I. O. in Washington. "Our fraction" in the A. F. L. increased from 45 to 80; in the C. I. O. the fraction was 70 to 75 the year before, but was less this year although "John L. Lewis will not get after our comrades for being Communists," while "the A. F. L. comrades are afraid to recruit because of William Green."

The fight to obtain permission for Marian Anderson to sing in Constitution Hall had the effect of "swinging the Negro people away from the Republican Party and toward the New Deal."

"There is probably a more complete all embracing unchecked domination of the life in the District by . . . monopolies than in most other cities. The population has become very subdued as a result of a permanent bureaucracy and the absence of the popular vote, and the more intimately I become acquainted, the more I see a network of intrigue and corruption, the more I see how the people are robbed by the representatives of banks, District Commissioners and A. F. L. reactionaries."

Relief Called "Sheer Massacre"

"Washington is a city of contrasts. We have the highest per capita income of the United States, $1,259 a year. The national average is $534. The deaths from pneumonia is 42 per cent higher than in the Nation. Deaths from t. b. 80 per cent, insanity 3½ per cent.

"The milk companies last year made 33 per cent profit. The cost of milk is 14 cents, the highest in the country, and the number of children dying before they reach the first year is the highest in the United States.

"Utilities are always losing money, according to the front pages of the newspapers, but when we must turn to the financial pages, Washington's four utility corporations . . . made tremendous profits in 1939 in comparison with 1938.

"The relief situation is a sheer massacre. There are some 50,000 unemployed, 15,000 getting some form of relief. The other 35,000 are left to starve. At the same time Big Business cries that there is no money, the real estate tax rate is one of the lowest in the United States.

"Scandals" Cited

"In the last few weeks a number of scandals broke loose which did a good deal to upset the tradition that we have the cleanest government in the United States." The "asphalt scandal" is specifically mentioned.

"To attempt to introduce a people's front program, on, let us say, taxation, relief, would split the suffrage movement. It is apparent today that there is a very strong need for uniting the progressive movement into a center that can speak for the people of Washington. * * * I would propose that we consider calling a legislative conference in the fall to which a rounded out program could be presented around which the progressive forces could be united on the New Deal basis."

"Many comrades look on the A. F. of L. as a solidly reactionary mass. In a recent period we have a number of very interesting developments which indicate what a change has taken place among the membership and certain sections of the leadership."

Hotel Strike "Outstanding"

"The outstanding struggle in the past year was the hotel strike. However, in spite of the excellent work of our comrades in the strike, this union recently held elections. Our position in a number of instances was weakened. As one result of the elections we see a strong united front between the Nazis, Italians, and the Jewish Trotskyites . . ."

Despite activity among the colored people "there has not been proportionately growth in the party."

"We have to face the sad fact that in spite of the good mass work our numerous fronts have not grown in the past year to any appreciable extent. I maintain that never was there a more favorable situation for recruiting than at the present time. In the District there is no interference with the work of the Communist Party by the authorities."

The report, a 14-page affair, of which the first seven are missing, was seized under subpena by Dies committee aides. Chancey, they asserted, refused to reveal the contents of the missing pages.

House Committee Secretary Stripley said the committee planned to call other leaders of the District Communist Party to the stand this week in an effort to learn more of their activities here. Stripling added that committee files contain evidence supporting membership statements made in the Communist report.

Japanese Take Cantonese City In Air Attack

Seizure of Shekki May Cut Hongkong, Macao Food Supply

By the Associated Press

Hongkong, Oct. 8.—Japanese forces were reported today to have occupied Shekki, Pearl River delta city, after a two-day intensive air attack.

It is the center of Kwangtung Province's model Chungshan district from which hail many overseas Chinese, particularly those now in Hawaii and the United States.

The reported seizure came after repeated Japanese sorties in the last six months had been beaten off by the Chungshan militia directed by District Magistrate Chang Hui-Chang, one-time Chinese air force chief and later minister to Cuba.

Dispatches said the Japanese landed under the guns of warships and their forces included several units of Chinese mercenaries from North China. The troops quickly overpowered the lightly armed Shekki militiamen, the reports said.

Military observers pointed out that permanent Japanese occupation of the district might reduce the fresh food supply of Hongkong and the Portuguese colony of Macao, 25 miles south of Shekki. Foodstuffs and manufactured goods for the interior pass through Macao and the Chungshan peninsula.

Chiang Assumes Post

Chengtu, China, Oct. 8 (AP).—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek today assumed the chairmanship of Szechuen Provincial Administration.

His action was seen as the final step in the liquidation of a delicate domestic political situation arising from the central Chinese government's assumption of military and financial control in the province formerly under the virtually autonomous authority of regional warlords.

Chinese Report Gains

Copyright by New York Times.

Chungking, China, Oct. 8.—The Chinese report they have regained more than 60 miles of territory in five days along the north Hunan front in repulsing Japanese forces who three weeks ago launched an offensive against Changsha.

Dispatches from Changsha tonight reported the Chinese were continuing to clean up the area south of the Sinchiang River, decimating small Japanese units at various points and besieging others in towns. The Japanese force in the city of Sinchiang faces annihilation. It is surrounded by Chinese.

Soviet to Rush Supplies for Reich

occupied by Red troops, were considered vain.—Editor's note.]

Thus Lithuania, which borders Germany, would become a virtual Russian protectorate as have the other small Baltic nations through treaties hastily negotiated while Germany was locked in war with Britain and France.

The Turkish foreign minister, Sukru Saracoglu, attended a concert tonight as his talks with Soviet authorities lagged, apparently because a Turkish military mission now is visiting London.

It was considered significant that Finland chose as her representative a man who is well-informed on Swedish views. Paasikivi conducted peace negotiations with Russia in 1920.

Tougher Than Smaller States

Informed Moscow sources predicted Finland would not resist any "reasonable" Soviet demands, but that she might prove a tougher customer than the little Baltic states if the price asked was high.

In Moscow belief was expressed that the Russians primarily want the Finnish-owned islands of Lanvansaari and Seiskar, in the Gulf of Finland, which are unfortified, but could control the approaches of Leningrad.

If Russia should ask control of the Aaland Islands, between Finland and Sweden, it was expected Sweden would join Finland in objecting and would try to get German support.

These islands, too, are unfortified, but control the connection between the Gulf of Bothnia and the Baltic. Control of the Aalands would give Russia power over Swedish and Finnish shipping and might threaten Stockholm.

German Trade Involved

Action on a Finnish-Swedish request to fortify the Aaland Islands was postponed earlier this year by the League of Nations Council because Russia objected.

Germany would be affected since Sweden ships her a huge amount of iron ore annually as well as timber and other products.

Russia has troops stationed along the Finnish frontier, but their strength was not known.

Economic issues between Finland and Russia have been under discussion through normal diplomatic channels and the two nations already have a nonaggression pact. The Finns now contend that since Estonia has granted Russia naval bases on islands in the Gulf of Finland, Russia no longer has need of an Aaland base to protect Leningrad.

Finland, strongly anti-Soviet, previously has relied on Germany to offset Russian pressure, but since Germany has withdrawn from the Northern Baltic, Finland's position was seen as more difficult.

The Soviet press took on an increasingly anti-British tone today with articles attacking British aims and policy.

Counselor of Embassy Reports China's Strength Grows

A huge dragon's head gobbled dollar bills, a drum thudded and, amid the din, members of Washington's Chinese colony exchanged hopeful predictions of China's future—all in celebration of the twenty-eighth anniversary of the Chinese Republic yesterday.

Cleared of traffic and fluttering with flags, H street between Sixth and Seventh streets northwest was a-jostle with celebrating crowds. But their gayety was tempered by the war clouds over China, and they soberly tossed dollar bills into the collection for refugee work.

A weird "lion dance" to the rhythm of gong and drum held the crowd's attention. The gaudy lion's head, mounted on the shoulders of a Chinese youth, pounced upon the dollar bills dangling from upper windows on long strings with cabbage and lettuce leaves as additional bait.

Diplomat Speaks

Dr. C. L. Chen, counselor of the Chinese Embassy, spoke, declaring that China's greater unity and strength pointed to "a bright future."

Leaders of Chinese organizations here gathered in a little yellow-walled room in the headquarters of the Chinese National Salvation Association at 607 H street, to hear Dr. Chen and other speakers whose words filtered through a loud speaker to the crowd in the street.

Standing under a flag-draped picture of Gen. Chiange Kai-shek, C. C. Hung, minister of the Chinese community, read the will of Dr. Sun, founder of the Chinese Republic, who handed down a challenge to his fellow-citizens to preserve his principles.

Benedict Sing C. Lee, a student at Catholic University, declared that the new report of a victory over the Japanese in Northern Hunan Province was a "present given to us for the anniversary celebration."

Army Reported Stronger

Dr. Chen said the Chinese army is greater in strength than when hostilities began, while the Japanese army is deteriorating.

They poured out their help yesterday. One man, watching the festivities from a balcony, dropped a one-dollar bill into an outstretched flag, then another and another. As the lion's head wagged and cajoled, the man then pulled a $10 bill from his pocket and let it flutter after the others.

Afterwards a little group, with the aid of an abacus, added up $559. But several hundred more dollars were expected from the sale of flowers which sprouted from buttonholes.

Mrs. J. Y Yee, president of the Chinese Women's Association of Washington, which aided in the celebration, displayed a personal letter from Madame Chiang Kai-shek, with a receipt for $1,000 which the association sent for relief work in China

Growing Sentiment for U. S. Mediation Cheers Germany

By Melvin K. Whiteleather

Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Oct. 8.—Germans evinced great interest today in the wave of sentiment in the United States Senate favoring mediation by President Roosevelt in the European war.

The German view was that Adolf Hitler's hand remained outstretched to anyone who would grasp it in peace.

Authorized officials have tried to leave no doubt that the Fuehrer would welcome a peace initiative from the President of the United States and reports from Washington said many Senators, both proponents and opponents of the Administration neutrality bill, favored Mr. Roosevelt's stepping in now as a peacemaker.

(Senators on both sides of the neutrality controversy expressed the opinion in the last two days that the President should take any opportunity afforded by evidence of German desire for peace to press for a settlement of the European conflict.

(Mr. Roosevelt, at his Hyde Park home, sent word to reporters that he had nothing to say at present.

(Authoritative Washington sources said the Government's policy consistently had been that the United States was ready and willing to aid Europe in reaching a general settlement of economic and disarmament problems, but that it would not be drawn into political squabbles.)

A good deal of attention is being given in Berlin these days to what goes on in Washington.

One result has been the adoption of an English term—"cash and carry"—into German speech. The Germans have learned to use it while studying Congressional debate on the Roosevelt Administration's neutrality proposals.

Long newspaper articles have appeared explaining that "cash and carry" means supplies bought in the United States would have to be paid for with cash and be transported in non-American ships.

The German government continued to scan world reaction to Hitler's Friday Reichstag speech, but today was the most peaceful Sunday since the war against Poland started September 1. It was a sunny autumn day and the only apparent peace disturbers were babies who wailed occasionally as their mothers trundled them through the parks.

Government ministries were deserted as officials took their first days of rest in five weeks.

Peace Around the Corner

Hitler was in Berlin but there was no sign of activity around his palace. Even customary press conferences in government departments failed to occur.

For two days the German press has been filled with reports from world capitals describing "the deep and favorable impression" made by Hitler's speech.

Millions of Germans, therefore, seem convinced that peace is just around the corner.

interested only in repeal of the arms embargo."

While opponents of embargo repeal contended the ballot on the Tobey motion would be no true test of sentiment on the bill itself, Senator Byrnes (Democrat) of South Carolina, Administration supporter, said he thought it would give a good idea of how the Senate would act on the whole measure. Byrnes and other Administration strategists have forecast a two-to-one vote in favor of the bill.

Tobey Fears Tabling

There were indications an effort may be made to table the Tobey motion in order to dispose of it without debate, but the New Hampshire senator warned:

"If you send that motion down a side-track, look out! There may be a cargo of dynamite at the other end of the track which you will bump into."

While forecasts were made in some cricles that the amendment stage in the bill's progress may be reached late this week, shipping interests press efforts to reduce the loss that industry appears to face when the American merchant marine is denied the right to carry any supplies to belligerent powers or to enter any areas designated by the President as combat zones.

Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, it was learned, meeting with several members of the Foreign Relations Committee on Saturday, called their attention in forcible language to figures in possession of the commission which show that such prohibitions would deprive American ships upward of one-fifth of their normal commerce. Between 6,750,000 and 7,000,000 tons of a total of 22,586,781 tons of export and import trade carried in American ships in 1937, according to commission surveys, went to countries now at war or to neutrals in or near combat zones.

Downey to Continue

In addition, a fight is to be made to remove the 90-day credit provision for belligerent purchasers of American goods, the isolationists and Administrationites being split on whether the short-term credit provision is tantamount to "cash" as called for by the President.

The date on which amendments may be considered, however, depended on length and number of speeches still to be delivered in the general debate.

Despite a noticeable falling off in public interest in the verbal battle, Senate Majority Leader Barkley pointed out that Senator Downey (Democrat), of Californi,a will continue today an extended address he began Friday. Speeches also are to be delivered by Senators Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, Danaker (Republican), of Connecticut; Lodge (Republican), of Massachusetts, and La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, against embargo repeal, and Senators Wagner (Democrat), of New York, Burke (Democrat), Taft (Republican) of Ohio, Barkley Byrns, and Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, in support of the Administration bill.

The neutrality debate continued over the radio last night, as Senators Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, and Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, spoke over the Mutual system.

Admits Lack of Interest

Senator Schwellenbach, contending enactment of the bill is necessary to keep the United States out of the European war, remarked he had discussed the situation with President Roosevelt.

"He has 'his Dutch up' on this question of staying out of war," Schwellenbach commented, "and nobody is going to change him on it."

The Washington Senator, obviously reflecting the sharp falling off in public response to the debate as reflected in the dwindling of letters for and against the bill, wondered if the radio audiences were not getting "a little tired of listening to speeches upon this question."

Senator Overton contended repeal of the arms embargo is not necessary to provide a "cash and carry" neutrality law, insisting "we should have both." Remarking "we have erected a few barriers against involvement in foreign wars," Senator Overton said, "we should keep every one of them. I favor strengthening them, adding to them, but I am opposed to striking down a single one of them."

Members of the House, after marking time since convening of the extra session by taking three-day recesses, will begin a regular daily schedule today, with the omnipresent threat that some such "outside" issue as the antilynching bill, domestic relief measures, or wage-hour act revision might be forced to the fore while the chamber await completion of the Senate action on neutrality.

Fish, Woodrum to Talk

Plans for today's session, however, cover only a neutrality discussion with Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, ranking minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, prepared to attack the measure, and Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, to defend it.

In another foreign affairs development Representative Ludlow (Democrat), of Indiana, yesterday issued a statement expressing hope that President Roosevelt, "acting in the role of a friend of humanity, will offer his services to the European belligerents as a medium for bringing peace to a distraught world."

"I do not take any stock in the suggestion I see in certain newspapers that the President would be left open to embarrassment if a peace proposal emanating from him should be rejected by one side or the other," Representative Ludlow said.

"A peace bid by him at this time would be a timely and sound action and the world would applaud. I personally believe that such action by our President would end the war."

Socialist Urges Mediation

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Norman Thomas, Socialist leade., asked President Roosevelt today to undertake a mediation of the European war, "perhaps in conjunction with the nations of the Oslo group."

In a letter, which he read at a speech at the Forum of Labor Temple, Thomas urged the President to "explore every possible road to mediation for peace."

He suggested, "The essential prerequisite which must be found for any peace is a reasonable guarantee that Hitler will refrain from further aggressions by armed force or threat of armed force."

The Wilson Papers

Acquisition by the Library of Congress of the papers of the late President Woodrow Wilson is a matter of tremendous moment to historians, and Mrs. Wilson is entitled to the gratitude of the Nation for the gift she has made to it.

The volume of the material shortly to be transferred to the Library is said to be enormous and to cover virtually every phase of Wilson's life. Some of it, of course, has already been made familiar by Ray Stannard Baker, who had possession of the papers throughout his biographical labors.

For future students no doubt the most interesting and valuable part of the collection will be the manuscripts from Wilson's official and confidential files for the eight years of his administration, and in particular those documents relating to events preceding and during the World War. Most interesting of all perhaps will be his records of the Peace Conference.

It will be a long time before the final versions of Wilson's defeat at Versailles and his subsequent defeat in the Senate in his fight for the League Covenant will be written. It will be even longer before any final historical opinion can be expressed concerning how much or how little those defeats had to do with the utter collapse, within less than 20 years, of the whole system erected by the Versailles conferees. But when a final judgment is written there is no doubt that these, and supplementary documents now being sought by Librarian MacLeish, will play a great part in shaping it.

Mr. Hopkins' Warning

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins has added his warning to those of private business analysts against overoptimism as to the business outlook. He points out that the rapid rise in production and trade, which followed the outbreak of war, has not been "matched to date by greater consumption by the public or in capital expenditures by business for plant expansion and equipment." Hence he fears inventories may become excessive, especially since there is no assurance that exports will expand immediately as a result of war.

Official warnings of this kind are very salutary at this critical juncture. It would be a dangerous gamble, and it might be a tragic error, for businessmen to base their plans upon the expectation of a war boom in this country. On the other hand, it would be a mistake to ignore the domestic influences at work to bring about an upturn in business, even without the stimulus of the European war. While the outbreak of war caused an abnormally rapid rise in productive activity in September, the upward trend has been in evidence for some time. The Federal Reserve Board's August index of industrial production, for instance, stood at 102 (the 1923-25 average represents 100), compared with 92 in April and May. The rise in output, according to the board, was quite general and largely reflected a sustained level of consumption.

In September the Reserve Board's index jumped to about 110, with a still higher level prevailing at the end of the month. The sudden spurt in inventory buying which accelerated the September advance was due chiefly to protective purchases by domestic industries with abnormally low stocks on hand. This change from a hand-to-mouth buying basis, although war-induced, is a sign of reviving confidence which should be welcomed, provided it is not carried too far.

Fortunately, many of our business leaders are fully aware of the dangers which Secretary Hopkins stresses, and have already indicated that their calculations are not based upon expectations of a war boom. Furthermore, they are impressed with the fact that a war boom would provide no foundation for a stable business structure, and would bring loss and ruin in its wake.

War in Europe undoubtedly creates many problems for American industry, the solution of which calls for exercise of real foresight. There is, however, a vast difference between intelligent planning to allow for changing market conditions directly affecting specific industries, and speculative activities based on the mere assumption that war abroad will boost prices at home.

A Question Of Defense

Legislators who are thoughtfully studying the question of American neutrality will find unusual interest in this week's poll by the American Institute of Public Opinion. Indeed, the findings of Dr. Gallup may lead some to question whether they have accurately interpreted public opinion as to some issues now before Congress.

Nearly three-fourths of those participating in the poll favor use of the United States Army and Navy, if necessary, to prevent Canada, Cuba and the Latin-American countries in the vicinity of the Panama Canal from being invaded by an European power. A majority of 53 per cent would extend this protective policy to all the countries of South America. In effect, the public has indicated overwhelming support for the use of military force in defense of the United States and its vital interests.

To date Congress seems to have been chiefly concerned with the emphatic desire of the American people to keep out of the war in Europe. Legislators have undoubtedly been influenced by the previous Gallup Poll showing a majority of 95 per cent against sending our Army and Navy abroad to fight Germany. An enormous volume of mail urging legislators to avoid involvement in the European war has also had its effect. There can be no question whatever as to the ardent desire of the people and of Congress to avoid a repetition of the events of 1917.

This sentiment is very largely responsible for the drastic restrictions upon American shipping written into the neutrality bill, and for the apparent willingness of the Administration to sacrifice various international rights to which this country, as a neutral, is entitled. It is now obvious, however, that there is no pacifism in the attitude of the great majority of citizens. They are just as determined to defend vital American interests as they are eager to escape involvement in the European conflict.

This clarification of American public opinion raises a question as to whether the rank and file of citizens would support that section of the neutrality bill before the Senate which would forbid "any American vessel to carry any passengers or any articles or materials to any state" named as a belligerent. A large majority of those answering a previous poll would require Great Britain and France to carry away in their own ships goods purchased from this country. But the Senate bill, as it now stands, would prevent American ships from entering the ports of Australia, New Zealand, India and even the ocean ports of Canada.

Under the additional provision authorizing the President to define "combat areas," American trade with most of the world might be seriously crippled. During the last few days the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has given some consideration to this outlook. There is no indication, however, that these sweeping provisions are to be modified.

In the minds of some Senators a voluntary surrender of certain neutral rights appears to be the only alternative to involvement in a foreign war. "We have got to keep our seamen from being killed," says Senator Pittman. "That got us into the last war." Carried to extremes, that policy would result in sweeping all American ships off the sea out of fear that one might be attacked.

It may be that the American people would willingly suffer the losses such a policy would entail if it were the only alternative to participation in the European war. But the choice does not necessarily lie between these recognized evils. The United States could assert and protect its neutral rights against hostile acts from any source, without joining forces with any belligerent power. Certainly the defense of our rights to carry on neutral trade on the seas, even if it should necessitate naval action against unwarranted commerce raiding, would not require the dispatch of an expeditionary force to Europe.

Participation in an European war is one thing and protection of American rights and fundamental interests is another. It is true that defense of our shipping was an important factor leading to the dispatch of American troops to France in the World War. But vital changes have taken place since then, both in military strategy and in the attitude of the American people. It would be entirely possible to use our naval strength to defend our own national interests, without becoming involved in the European conflict. And in the long run that policy might be less costly than the progressive withdrawal of American ships from the seas.

The Right Approach

William Green's candid declaration that Government employes cannot strike against their employer should go a long way toward the removal of any lingering confusion as to the status of unions in the Federal service. That sort of straight thinking on the part of the president of the American Federation of Labor should facilitate the improvement of working conditions for Government employes.

Independent observers have long contended that the Government cannot tolerate strikes on the part of its own employes. Their reasoning has been essentially the same as that of Mr. Green in his address to the Allied Council of Federal Employes at Cincinnati. A strike against the Government, he asserted, would be a strike against all the people of the United States.

This does not mean, of course, that labor organizations within the Government service are ineffective. It means only that their tactics must be different from those used in dealing with a private employer.

While the A. F. of L. favors a 35-hour week and a minimum wage of $1,500 a year for Government employes, therefore, it will seek attainment of that aim only by persuasive methods. Congress will undoubtedly give this request from the A. F. of L. a sympathetic hearing. Under present conditions, however, an effort to equalize the hours of Government employes would be more timely than the move for a blanket reduction of working time.

Unsuccess Story

Once again the New York Yankees, sweeping through the World Series in four straight games, as they did last year against the Chicago Cubs, have proved themselves the greatest collection of ball players ever assembled—greater even than their predecessors of 1927, Babe Ruth and all.

Indeed, if it were possible to animate the statues of Matthewson, Sisler, Lajoie and the rest in "Baseball's Hall of Fame," the Yankees, if challenged, could no doubt spot them a half dozen runs and vanquish them as easily as they did the unhappy Cincinnati Reds.

Still no amount of technical superiority can explain the strange and ghastly succession of events in the ninth and tenth innings yesterday at Crosley Field. Since we are loath to believe that any of the nice young Yankee athletes possesses the evil eye we must conclude that, if there is an explanation, it lies somewhere in the realm of psychopathology. Can the extraordinary behavior of Messrs. Myers, Goodman and Lombardi of the Reds be interpreted in terms of the pleasure-pain principle or the Freudian death-wish for instance?

However that may be, the 1939 World Series seems to prove that, although the sympathies of the American public lie oftenest with the underdogs, we have no special fondness for dead underdogs. That is to say, we warm readily enough to desperate causes but we do not, like the Irish and the Poles, worship lost causes. The Cincinnati Reds went into the series taking with them the good wishes of perhaps 80 per cent of the Nation. Had they managed to humble the arrogant Yankees it would have filled us with the same pleasurable emotions evoked by our folk fables, wherein the poor and virtuous shopgirl outwits the beautiful heiress in the game of love and the lone and honest cowhand triumphs over the powerful rustlers and the corrupt sheriff in the game of riches.

But when the story fails to follow the plot, as it often does, it is another matter. It is not for nothing that the only philosophic system ever developed in America is called pragmatism and means pretty much the same thing that ball players mean when they talk of "playing the percentage."

After the first two games in New York proved, even to the most tender-minded among us, that the Reds had no more chance than the Jimpsonweed Juniors of getting anywhere with the Yanks, we unleashed our characteristic moral indignation against the unsuccessful. We lost no time telling Mr. McKechnie what we think (when it fails to work) of the theoretic value of pitching to dangerous hitters in the pinches, or of permitting an outfielder to throw to the wrong bag. It will be long before we finish telling him how we evaluate shortstops who drop double-play balls in the ninth inning with one out and tying runs on the bases.

"The majority of the people in this country are for the Roosevelt program, whatever it is," declares a leading New Dealer. Whatever is it?

The Covered Bridge Again

(From the Chicago Daily News)

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch recently revived the old question of why covered bridges were covered. Lately a WPA project which made some inquiries in Ohio—where no less than 609 old-time covered bridges still stand—brought to light eight theories, all about as inadequate as those put forward during previous controversies.

It seems high time the argument were settled—especially as the answer, which happens to be in our possession, is entirely simple. It was given us by an old codger of a chemist and wood products research man whose granddady, back East, was an engineer and builder of covered bridges—what you might call a tip from the feedbox.

Here's the explanation: Covered bridges were covered to keep the rain off. Yes, and the snow and the hot summer sunshine, too; not to keep these punishing agents away from the men and animals using the bridge—though this has something to be said in its favor—but rather, to keep them from exercising their deleterious effects upon the basic substructure of the bridge itself, its huge timber beams, arches and trusses.

From Idaho

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Loyalty to democratic principles forces me to challenge Senator Borah's speech as quoted in the Christian Science Monitor. He asks, "Is it not the purpose in securing the repeal of the embargo to enable us to furnish arms and munitions to one group of nations and deny them to another, which groups are in mortal combat?"

Most certainly, this is what loyal Americans interested in the preservation of democracies desire! Informed persons know that 20 years ago the war should not have stopped. Germany asked for peace when it realized it could not win and while their country was intact—for many American soldiers had adopted the slogan "On to Berlin."

Almost immediately hostilities ceased they began their methodical preparation for revenge and their war lords have continued 'til now. A few days ago Hitler, as he shouted defiance to the world, announced Germany was prepared to carry on for years. Do Americans vitally interested in preserving the democratic form of government want to see naziism installed in Europe? Are we to be forced to deal with dictators and limited by their greed and restrictions?

Mr. Borah must be a veritable Rip Van Winkle to think this Nation can ignore the other countries of the world since the airplane and increased speed in all modes of travel have brought us into such close contact with them. Our problems are their problems. While we certainly don't desire or need to rush into war, if one group of the warring countries—with whom we are sympathetic—need our support in upholding the democratic principle, then, the least we can do would be to supply necessities to those nations, when they are willing to come to our shores and assume the responsibility of delivering as well as paying cash for the goods.

HELEN FEDDERSON.
Kellogg, Idaho, Sept. 22.

For Staying Out

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me a few comments on the letter signed "Hyacinthe Ringrose."

He asks what kind of world we would have today if we had not prevented Germany from winning the last war. Germany could not have won the last war in any case. She was out of raw materials and food. Soldiers were being half-fed and civilians were dying of starvation. The fact that Germany, a tiny country smaller than our Texas, was fighting the entire world single-handed is proof enough that she could not have won in any case.

The letter states that we should be good Samaritans to England and France. Has he forgotten that these noble nations are refusing to pay us the money they "borrowed" from us to fight the last war, and that this money would enable us to create jobs for a considerable percentage of our 11,500,000 unemployed?

Kosciusko did indeed help our colonists during his visit to our country, and Pulaski, exiled from Poland, gave his young life at the battle of Savannah. Let us honor the memory of these men, by all means.

But let us not forget that it was Von Steuben who drilled Washington's army for him. Could our brave but untrained colonists have otherwise withstood the onslaughts of the British? And let us not forget De Kalb, who gave such strong support to Washington and who, when our own Gen. Gates deserted his command at the battle of Camden, took his place and led our colonists bravely on until he fell, mortally wounded.

Mr. Ringrose asks what "excuse" we have for "passing by on the other side." If I know my Bible, the Samaritan bound up the wounds of the assaulted man. He did not set after the attackers with fire and sword. We, too, can sell food and medical materials to the Allies if they will come and get them and pay cash. As a Christian I am opposed to selling anything which kills.

As for an "excuse" to stay out of this war, I shall give one right now. I am a visitor in the North. My home is in the South. There I must see, constantly, year after year, such pitiful numbers of undernourished, ragged American children, living in hovels, having not even shoes, that it is fit to break one's heart.

If we Americans really have money enough to afford declaring war on people 3,000 miles away, then let us spend this money rather on our own people. Let us create a project to give work and a living wage to the fathers of our own underprivileged children. That is my "excuse" for our staying out of this war.

RICHARD MILLER.
Baltimore, Md., Oct. 5.

Senator Borah's Statement

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Borah has declared that he is not a pacifist. He would, he tells us, actually vote for war, though still mindful of the consequences, still with reservations—if our soil were being invaded and our people being killed! Then—and only then, Mr. Borah? That is a strange statement, and one not exactly reassuring to those of us who live on the coast, some of whose lives would have to be sacrificed to prove to Mr. Borah that it was time to fight.

Does it mean he would not agree to any action being taken, unless some of us were killed? Or that he would surrender us, still considering the terrible consequences of war, if the approaching enemy would withhold its fire? He has often expressed his solicitude for the "boys" who make up our armed forces; does he hold unarmed civilian lives more lightly?

Probably Mr. Borah did not really mean any of that; undoubtedly he was not thinking realistically of the situation he invoked. And I believe we can be sure, in such an eventuality, that enough of our legislators would be sufficiently far-sighted to take the measures necessary for our protection in better time.

Doubtless, too, Mr. Borah made the statement in utter confidence that no such situation could ever arise. But recent events have sadly betrayed Mr. Borah's confidence of only three months ago; he promised us then that there would be no war in Europe. Then, again, to one who has crossed the Pacific three times, and the Atlantic 13 times by at least four different routes, the absolute impregnability of our ocean barriers is not as impressive as it might be.

There is also the practical consideration, even to one who has the most implicit faith in our Navy, that delayed action is usually less effective than prompt, or, better still, preventive action. Perhaps, too, we East Coasters are more inclined to remember that our traditional security has depended as much upon the friendliness of the British navy as upon the width of the Atlantic.

I am sure that Mr. Borah did not mean to imply that he would throw us to the wolves before he could make up his mind; still, his statement was a little careless, if he hoped to inspire our confidence in him.

"Keep War Over There"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that the United States is on the verge of becoming a German colony, I must hasten to write you before letters to the editor become verboten.

A colony, according to my high school definition, is a country economically and politically under the domination of another.

A certain Senator and his camp followers definitely put us in a colonial status when they tell us we dare not change one of our American laws or sell our goods because Mr. Hitler wouldn't like it.

This group of contradictionists orate fearfully on the danger of foreign entanglements, and before drawing another breath inform us that, at least for the present, a certain foreign power will, by the threat of its displeasure, influence the passage or repeal of one of our laws.

Since when has the United States become so weak that a frown across the seas gives us a Nation-wide case of jitters? Germany has not asked our permission to wage war. Why should we consider hers when we only want to repeal a law?

But this is just a lot of talk; let's be practical about this thing. What we really want is for France and England to win this war and for us to stay out of it.

Let's sell France and England all the arms they can buy. If they can't buy any, then give them all they can use. If we give them enough maybe they can lick the dictators without our help. That is the best way to keep me and 10,000,000 other young men out of this war. If they can't win the war with all we can give them then send me and 10,000,000 other young men to win it for them, and us. That's the best way to keep our families from becoming involved in this war.

In other words, let's keep this war over there if we have to go over there and fight it.

"Funny War"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When the Allies declared war on Germany, why didn't Hitler rush a million men to the West immediately? Didn't he know that the issue must be decided in the West?

Why did England keep a military mission in Russia when she knew that Russia had or shortly would sign a non-aggression and trade pact with Germany? Why did she send one in the first place when Chamberlain knew that Great Britain and Russia would never come to an agreement?

If the Allies are really at war why doesn't England call universal conscription? Why doesn't Canada raise an army? You still need men to fight a war.

Why does England refuse to let France present Mussolini with an ultimatum asking Italy what they intend to do? The Allies do not need Italy. France could overrun Italy in three months, and if they did that would be the end of fascism in Italy. I thought the Allies were trying to stamp out Hitlerism. Is there any essential difference between Hitlerism and fascism? The Allies don't need Italy. In fact she would be a hindrance to them. But Chamberlain won't let France act. And why won't he?

I'd hate to feel that the Maker of Munich was in charge of my life during this war. Why don't the English wake up and throw the pro-Nazi Chamberlain out?

Until they really start fighting I won't believe that Chamberlain is not waiting for Russia and the Reich to start fighting between themselves.

It's a funny war.

The Post Impressionist

Declasse

THE DOCTOR on the second floor has a son who is starting his second year at music school. Since all in the house have windows on a communal well, we of the fifth floor are well aware of how much assiduousness and zeal study of the violin demands. Besides this, there is a piano—down the same well—on which all four members of some family play the same composition. I can tell the style of each one of them now—even when the piano chords mingle with the notes of the violin. The music comes to me in my mid-morning (oh, well-earned!) sleep. But, as our nearest neighbor said over the clothesline one day before she really knew us, "It's much nicer than the radio anyway."

But apparently the dramatic arts are neither as well understood nor as charitably looked upon. We have been here only six weeks, and already the whole is painfully sensible of our presence. When we happen to pass our fellow tenants on the stairs—as they are coming in from work and we are going out to work—our cheery "Good evening" is echoed in that breath-holding gasp that people make when they are afraid of catching someone else's cold.

That is apparently what put them wise to the viciousness of our ways—our turning nighttime into daytime. Now I can understand that when you are just dropping off to sleep after a hard tussle with your nerves it is annoying to be disturbed at 3 a. m. by people who are obviously at their best, happiest, most wide-awake moment of the 24 hours. And it does not matter whether this is in the form of serious exchange of universal truths, or in a lighter mood to the accompaniment of clear girlish laughter. But we have been most careful to keep the windows on the well tightly shut at such times, since receiving those pungent and thoroughly anonymous notes.

The clothesline episode was the beginning of it. I can see that plainly now. The people in the front apartment inquired through the janitress if they could stretch a line from their kitchen window to ours. We were only too happy to oblige a neighbor. So, one bright September noon, we were awakened by the unwearied persistence of the doorbell. I rose and opened the door to our neighbor (clad in what the shops call a "hostess gown") and led the way hazily through the living room where my roommate lay, not so peacefully, but sleeping still.

The clothesline was installed—we had a merry setting up exercise throwing the line between the windows and trying to catch it—and we became very chummy over the difference between a granny and a square knot (you can't make mistakes with scenery). But since that day, our neighbor must have been warned about us by his wife (women proverbially understand these things much better) for he hardly nods to us any more. We haven't dared use the joint clothesline—so I hope he felt properly mortified when he met us today with our bags of laundry over our shoulders like Santa Claus.

The pay-off came, however, when Carrie, our janitress, caught me at 4 a. m. letting a handsome stranger out of the front door. My explanation—that we had been rehearsing all evening and he had come back with us to get a forgotten script and to share our late supper, as casually as one of her "regular" tenants would bring a friend back from the office for supper. It sounded fishy, and she told me so.

No, she couldn't believe that story. She proved her deep mistrust of us by appearing on the second day of October (the first was Sunday!) for the rent. She stood in the dorway while I went to fetch it and afterwards counted out dollar by dollar the money that I was lucky enough to have ready. There was no smile on her sardonic face and I was conscious that she noted the lack of chairs in our house, that we try to make up for with our two studio couches—and that, though we eat on a card table, we are better dressed than her other clients. I am sure she thinks I hocked a diamond-and-emerald bracelet to get the rent money.

I know our reputations are sealed now, and that no amount of goodwill on our part can soften the hostility or allay the suspicions of our virtuous neighbors. We will hereafter live "on the outskirts of society." Only when and if we have our names in lights and can afford a maid will our lives change automatically from "sordid" to "glamorous."

Two Campaigns

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A great national campaign is on for us to furnish funds to the Red Cross for binding the wounds of the wounded. At the same time another great national campaign is on for us to furnish guns to belligerents for wounding the souped. It is like the Walrus, of "Alice in Wonderland," who, while going right ahead and eating all the little oysters, nevertheless did weep for them and greatly sympathize.

The Security Belt Idea

By Ernest K. Lindley

Panama Declaration

SOME CONFUSION is to be expected about the meaning and practical effects of the Declaration of Panama, proclaiming a belt of neutral water around the entire Western Hemisphere south of Canada.

British officials are quoted as calling it a "novel" idea, without sanction in international law, and unacceptable to them. Such comment may be based partly on misinformation, for the security belt may be of collateral benefit to the British. But whether the British "accept" the security belt or not is not a matter of great moment. The Monroe Doctrine is not "accepted" in any formal sense by a great many nations, but it has come to be observed by all of them.

The Declaration of Panama is a corollary of the Monroe Doctrine. It is so far from "novel" that it was suggested by Thomas Jefferson more than a century and a quarter ago, even before the Monroe Doctrine was promulgated.

Mid-Atlantic Once Suggested As Line

JEFFERSON WANTED to go even farther by making the mid-Atlantic the dividing line between a war-stricken Old World and a peaceful New World. He envisioned the fleets of the United States and Brazil jointly patrolling the western Atlantic. During World War six Latin-American nations, including the three largest, put forward or supported proposals containing the security belt idea. Now all 21 American republics have subscribed to the Declaration of Panama.

The immediate purpose is to keep the north and south shipping lanes of the Western Hemisphere free of hostile activities by non-American belligerent nations. The broader meaning of the declaration is set forth eloquently in the statement made by the Brazilian delegation in subscribing to the Declaration of Panama:

"Continental security against overseas aggression must be obtained on sounder basis.

"It is on the seas that surround us that lies the future fate of our sovereignties, because the protection of American soil will not be possible, as in the past, without the security of the surrounding seas . . .

"To the defense of the continental territorial intergrity we must add, therefore, as an inseparable part of an American political whole, the security of continental waters."

Hostile Activities In Belt Forbidden

THIS DOES NOT mean that British and French armed ships cannot come into ports of their colonies in Latin America. In fact, at present both armed surface ships and submarines can enter the ports of neutral nations in this hemisphere. But under the Declaration of Panama they will be forbidden to engage in hostile activities in the waters of the security belt.

What happens if a belligerent nation violates the Declaration of Panama? The American Republics may then consult as to steps to be taken. They may also patrol individually or collectively the entire security belt. Each retains always the right to take any individual action which may seem necessary for the protection of its own sovereignty.

All kinds of specific problems will arise, just as they have arisen under the Monroe Doctrine. When the doctrine was proclaimed we lacked the power to enforce it. In a number of cases we did not even try to enforce it.

There is no doubt about the ability of the 21 republics of the Western Hemisphere to enforce the Declaration of Panama against persistent offenders. No one should jump to the conclusion that it will be necessary to have the impressive kind of naval patrol all around the Western Hemisphere that has already been set up off our eastern Atlantic shore.

Force Not Needed To Penalize Offenders

IN THE FIRST place there are many steps short of naval action which can be resorted to. One would be to deny the offending power the use of neutral ports on the Western Hemisphere. There are all kinds of economic penalties that could be applied. Even the Germans are not beyond the reach of economic penalties. For example, some 80 of their merchant ships are interned in the neutral ports of the Western Hemisphere.

In the second place, the greater danger of interference with shipping in American waters lies in the North Atlantic and the Caribbean. During World War I there was practically no submarine activity off the American coast south of Cape Hatteras, although early in the war German surface raiders were active off Chile and Argentina. We have the naval craft to do a pretty thorough job of patrolling our own coasts and the entrances to the Caribbean. In the absence of a strong naval patrol there might be occasional violations of the Declaration of Panama in other waters, but it is hardly conceivable that, against the economic and military power of the 21 republics of the New World, any belligerent would regard the gains to be secured by repeated offenses as commensurate with the risk incurred.

Soviet Oil Supply Fails Nazis

Russian Increase In Consumption, Cut in Exports, Dam Source

German optimism over possibility of obtaining adequate wartime supplies of oil from Russia have been dampened, the United States commercial attache at Berlin reported to the Commerce Department yesterday.

Increase in Russian consumption of her own supplies, with a corresponding decrease in exports to all countries, is coupled with disapproval of the quality and organization of Soviet saipments in curbing Reich enthusiasm over the outlook, the report said.

Demands of Germany's war machine will force her to postpone the self-sufficiency program that was to have made the country independent of outside oil by 1942, the attache predicted yesterday.

Signing of a commercial agreement with the Soviet Union was the first modification, said the report. Previously, oil imports had declined as synthetic gasoline production increased and foreign exchange became scarce.

War Needs Compel Heavy Importation

"HOWEVER," said the statement, "Germany, because of her present belligerent status, her highly mechanized armed forces, and increased industrial needs, must now endeavor to import petroleum in great quantities."

Germany's major sources of oil in this hemisphere, Mexico, the Netherlands West Indies, United States and Venezuela, have been restricted by the disruption of her ocean commerce by war.

Though German oil industry leaders anticipate a partial restoration of the oil barter trade with Russia, said the report, Russia's oil exports have dropped sharply.

No Soviet oil shipments were made to Germany during the first half of this year, but shipments from the West Indies totaled 365,471 tons; Mexico, 279,573; Rumania, 257,592; United States, 112,736; Venezuela, 72,289, and other nations 123,042.

Because of the rapid decline in Russian exports, many observers within the Reich question Russia's ability to meet German demands for oil, either crude or refined, now that former demands may be renewed.

Good Oils Mixed With Bad In Tanks

FURTHER CONDITIONS that dampen German optimism concern the condition of Soviet shipments received in the past, and in German disapproval of Russian shipping methods. The so-called inadequacy of Russian tanking arrangements has resulted in the past in the mixing of superior oils with oil of a lower quality.

A feeling seems to be prevalent throughout certain sections of the German trade experts from the Reich might improve the condition of the Baku and Grosny supply, just as organization experts are understood to have done in Rumania when arrangements were being made for oil shipments from Bucharest. The need of new cracking plants and more modern equipment for the hydrogenation of fuels is also suggested as a needed improvement to present Soviet facilities, if Russia is to resume shipments to Germany.

It is pointed out that the actual gasoline obtained from crude oil in Russia amounts to only 25 or 30 per cent of the crude oil, while in America, due to better equipment, similar to that which the Germans might be able to supply to Russia, the recovery averages 45 per cent.

Thus at the same time that the trade pact opens the possibility of the Soviet supplying Germany's petroleum needs, it also presents the Germans with the problem of furnishing experts and equipment to the Russian oil fields and refineries.

Leaders of the German oil trade have indicated that the first step lies in a complete exchange of information regarding the Reich's needs and the Soviet's ability to supply them. Thereafter, the trend of the international conflict, the development of Germany's self-sufficiency in motor fuels, the return of more normal purchasing conditions which might permit the Western Hemisphere to resume its place as Germany's most important supplier and the ability of Soviet and German authorities to find a common ground for barter will all be of importance in determining the future course.

Supreme Court to Decide Today On Review of 7 Labor Cases

300 Petitions to Be Acted On at First Business Session of New Term; 3 C. I. O.-A. F. L. Disputes Before Tribunal

The Supreme Court is expected to announce today whether it will review seven controversies involving interpretation of the national labor relations act.

Disputes between the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. produced three of the cases.

Approximately 300 petitions will be acted on today at the first business session of the new term that began last Monday. These were filed in the summer recess that began June 5.

If the tribunal refuses a review, the decision of the lower court remains in effect. If a review is granted, there will be oral arguments followed by a final decision.

Litigation growing out of the Federation-C. I. O. conflicts, involves:

An appeal by the federation from a ruling by the United States Court of Appeals which left in effect a labor board order certifying a C. I. O. union as the exclusive bargaining agency for all Pacific Coast Longshoremen. The Court of Appeals held it did not have jurisdiction to pass on the certification.

Reinstatement Case

The labor board's effort to place the name of only one labor organization (a C. I. O. affiliate) on the ballot for a run-off election to determine collective bargaining representation for employes of the Consumers Power Co. at Jackson, Mich. The federation contended its affiliate also should be on the ballot. The Sixth Federal Circuit Court set aside the labor board order.

A labor board order directing the Waterman Steamship Corporation of Mobile, Ala., to reinstate a group of employes with back pay. They were dismissed after changing their membership from a federation to a C. I. O. affiliate. The Fifth Federal Circuit Court set aside the order, ruling that the dismissals were for economy.

Four other labor cases involve board orders against the Cudahy Packing Co., of St. Paul, the Louisville Refining Co., the National Licorice Co., of Brooklyn and the Crowe Coal Co., of Henry County, Mo. The orders were sustained in lower courts.

Action in anti-trust cases brought by the Department of Justice against the American Medical Association, 12 Mid-West oil companies, and a group of milk companies in the Chicago area will be taken a week from today or later. The Government was unsuccessful in lower courts.

Other Controversies

In addition to the labor cases, other controversies awaiting action today include:

An attack on constitutionality of the Federal capital stock tax.

An attack on the validity of a Federal Trade Commission order directing the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. to cease selling tires to Sears' Roebuck & Co. at "discriminatory" prices.

An attempt by a group of stockholders of Chicago's Central Republic Trust Co., now in receivership, to escape liability on a Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan made to the bank while Charles G. Dawes was chairman of the bank's board of directors.

Income tax cases affecting Robert T. Jones, jr., the golfer; Pierre S. duPont, of Wilmington, Del., and the estate of the late Will Rogers, movie actor and humorist.

A suit to recover one cent, paid by C. Leon de Aryan, of East San Diego under the California sales tax law.

Quake Study May Spot Guns For Artillery

New Type of Land Wave May Improve Gunnery Accuracy

By the Associated Press

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 8.—Discovery that certain explosions create a hitherto unknown type of "slanting earthquake" was reported today by a Harvard scientist, who said the finding might prove important in enabling Army artilleries to spot the location of heavy enemy guns.

Dr. L. Don Leet, director of Harvard's seismograph station, declared ten years of experimenting with man-made dynamite 'quakes had disclosed an entirely new form of earthquake wave which he said also would vitally affect general seismological theories and problems of building reinforcement against temblors.

Explaining that for certain types of explosions, the newly found wave registers strongly on instruments while four other known wave forms, recognized for 40 years, are scarcely recorded, Leet said:

"Because of its importance in tremors arising from explosions, the new wave is expected to play a considerable part in proposed uses of the seismograph (earthquake recorder) in Army artillery observation, for the location of heavy enemy guns, and also for computation by a gun crew of their accuracy of fire."

In the World War, he said, use of the seismograph as a gun spotter had been proposed, but not actually tried. He added that "important improvements" made in seismographic instruments since that time, together with application of knowledge on the new wave would enable earthquake experts to play an important role in the present European conflict and future wars.

The new wave, which is in the category of "surface" waves, as opposed to those at or near the earth's core, may be considered to have a "slanting" effect, Leet said, because it drives earth particles on a diagonal to its path.

Clocked as traveling 2,500 feet a second when set off by dynamite in sandy ground, the Leet wave is slower only than a "push-pull" wave form which travels through the earth's center, and a "side-to-side" wave of the internal variety. But it is faster than two other known waves operating in "surface" areas.

Who Wants War?

IN ALL THE DEBATE on the Hitler-Stalin revival of the World War nobody has yet pointed out that complete freedom of speech, religion and the press, and certain other luxuries of civilization, are preserved, in peacetime at least, only in capitalistic countries. It does not follow that they are preserved even in peacetime in all capitalistic countries, but it is an important fact that in peace or war they are preserved with the worst ferocity in those countries which have gone bolo in one guise or another.

Nevertheless, the Americans sometimes are asked to believe that the world would have nothing to lose but their chains in overthrowing capitalism when the obvious fact is that they would lose every ordinary habitual right. The Russians, of course, never had any rights and therefore may be said to have lost nothing; but the Germans and Italians have been heavy losers and scoff at American freedom only because they were unfit to govern themselves as free people.

Bolshevism Also Can Be Imperialistic

IN THIS WAR the Hitler-Stalin propaganda has it that Germany and Russia are fighting against British and French imperialism, as though imerialism and capitalism were identical or twin evils and as though bolshevism, whether red or brown, cannot be imperialistic. But the only nations in the war which have revealed territorial ambitions are Germany and Russia, and Italy, sitting on the bench, ready to go in on one side or the other, already has made two conquests and advertised an intention to go out for more.

In the face of the facts of life in this country, it is foolish to argue that American capitalists want war or that people who are not consciously capitalistic but just go through life exercising the liberties permitted only under capitalism could improve their condition by overthrowing capitalism. The capitalists saw what happened to the capitalists of Italy and Germany and are as mindful of their own personal, human rights as anyone else.

All Wars Waged By Dictatorships

THAT IS WHY the American capitalists have been so apprehensive about the New Deal. They saw in some phases of the New Deal a resemblance to the method by which Hitler and Mussolini built up local, strong-arm bureaus to make and administer law by ear and the creation of a class of wards or dependents of the central government who would keep that government in power and increase its power for the sake of what was in it for them. That might be an attractive proposition to the wards of the administration at the beginning, but, again, it is well to look at the other side, where a glimpse shows that dictators must force their wards into their armies and must make war.

No democratic capitalistic nation has made war in these years since the rise of bolshevism—red, brown, black and yellow. The wars all have been made by the dictatorships and the Russians, who once denounced poor old Chamberlain because he didn't fight in defense of human rights in Czecho-Slovakia, next denounced him because he did go to Poland's aid in defense of the same rights. Not only that, but imperialistic Russia, which has acknowledged Poland's rights as a nation and dickered for the chance to invade Poland disguised as a friend, seized the opportunity to stab Poland in the back, capture about a third of the country and just about extinguished the feeble independence of the Baltics.

EVERYBODY MUST realize that if this country should go to war civil liberties would be suspended and that, win or lose, the cost would be so great that capitalism would be unable to pay off and therefore would perish. When capitalism dies, according to the precedents of Russia, Germany and Italy, freedom dies, too. Capitalism may be doomed, anyway, as some of the New Deal appointees have thought, but if so that is to be lamented, because only under capitalism, with all its faults, have the people the rights which to Americans are as natural as breathing.

Theoretically, the Communists say, some day it will no longer be necessary to rule by dictatorship in Russia. But after 23 years the Russian dictatorship is more ferocious than ever, and one man rules the millions. The Communists used to sing a song of derision about capitalism and religon which said, "Work and pray, live on hay; you'll have pie in the sky when you die."

Well, who are going to have pie in the sky when they die? Is anybody having pie in Russia after 23 years of communism?

On The Record

Guardian and now a special writer for the Chicago Daily News. He had to flee when Hitler took Vienna, but nothing that Hitler can say about the act of wisdom in creating these states in the manner in which they were created equals what Mr. Fodor wrote, more or less unheeded, for years.

His contention, and the contention of John Guther, and of this columnist during the many years when she was a correspondent in Vienna and Berlin, was that these States, as constituted, were atrocities. The fault was not so much ethnographic as economic and political. The treaty of Versailles, especially in its financial and economic provision, was bad enough, but the treaties of Saint Germain and Trianon were monstrous. They broke up the great complex of states that had been held together by the Hapsburg dynasty for centuries—or, more accurately said—they ratified and legitimized a fait accompli.

Yet the only hope of the ultimate survival of these states—Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania, Hungary, Austria, Yugoslavia—their only hope for survival by their own power, lay in confederation; in the extension, modernization and democratization of the basic confederation idea of the Ausfro-Hungarian monarchy. In that idea alone lay the hope of unity with diversity; of independence and security for all of common defense without the assistance of Western powers; of cultural minorities; of mutual prosperity and of collaboration with Germany and Russia on the par of equality.

THE AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN monarchy, leaving an antedated and world-weary political and bureaucratic system out of account, was an organism in which agriculture, industry and commerce were well balanced, in which railways and waterways held the world together, in which Germanic, Slavic, Italian and Magyar culture had, through centuries, created a synthesis of its own, and in which for commercial purposes at least there was a common language—German.

The various elements of the empire broke up spontaneously during the war and new attachments and alliances were made, resulting in new states, but the Danubian basin is such a hodgepodge of nationalities that it was impossible to create a single state that was ethnically pure. Regardless of how the frontier might have been drawn, every single state was bound to include people of a different nationality—Germans and Poles in Czecho-Slovakia, Magyars in Rumania, Germans in Hungary, Ukrainians in both Poland and Czecho-Slovakia—for, no matter how the frontiers were moved around, the people were interspersed with one another. So it had been for centuries.

Citizenship in any of the new states would have been irksome for no one had the citizen also been a citizen of the federation with freedom of movement. The great powers in 1918 could have enforced confederation, and they should have done so. They allowed self-determination to go to lengths that in the long run meant anarchy. Hitler has been playing on the idea ever since. Instead of confederation and working together, Chauvinism ran rampant, tariffs, trade prohibitions, quotas, a welter of currencies, irredentist movements, rivalries, jealousies sprang up, and while some states flourished at the cost of others the general prosperity and culture declined, and Eastern Europe became fishing waters for all sorts of troubles. The human misery caused was great, everything hampered the freedom of movement of workers.

SO FAR this column agrees for once with Hitler.

But Hitler's solution will never work except by a long and continuous occupationand oppression. It is preposterous. He proposes that the non-Germanic peoples in the Danubian basin should live on the sufferance of Germany, with no representation worth the name and no vestige of political or economic equality. What he intends to do—and it is clear from what he has already done in Czecho-Slovakia—is to turn these peoples into coolies for Germany and their land and industries into colonies and colonial assets for Germany to exploit.

His promises regarding the territorial integrity of Rumania, Hungary or Yugoslavia are worth exactly as much as any other promise he has ever given. That he will not indulge in "aggression" is probably true. If western Europe will leave him alone he will not have to do so. By revolutionary activities, by buying corrupt politicians, subsidizing newspapers, organizing Iron Guards or other camouflaged Swastika groups and by intimidation and economic strangulation he can return to the "bloodless conquest" technique, now so joyfully copied by Stalin, and thus accomplish his purpose.

In the long run, however, it seems probable that he would come to a crash with Stalin, not on ideological grounds—there is not an ideology between the two rascals—but on the old Pan-Slavism versus Pan-Germanism issue. In a general divide-up Stalin would get the lion's share, if he poses as the protector of the Slavs, although there are millions of people in the Danubian basin—the Magyars and the Rumanians—who are neither Germans nor Slavic. Nor can one envisage what Hitler proposes—a general tragedy for millions of people whose ancestors have lived for centuries on the same soil, and all for no conceivable purpose, except the maniacal racial dream.

Also though Poles, Croats, Serbs, Czechs, Slovaks and Slovenians are Slavs, they are certainly not Russians, and altogether there are nearly 80,000,000 people in the Danubian basin who have far more in common with each other, by reason of a thousand years of history, than they have with either Russia or Germany.

ODD and old-fashioned as it may seem, the only practical, humane, intelligent and workable program for the non-Germanic peoples of the Danube and Poland, together with the Germanic peoples who live among them, is democracy and confederation—one army, one foreign policy, one currency, a customs union and possibly a modern, socially minded constitutional monarchy over all of them, as the crown and symbol of an ultimate unity that in no way interferes with the independence of the autonomous nationalities joined in the confederation.

Five years ago it would have been impossible to persuade any one of these states to see this picture. It would not be possible today. There are millions of Germans, too, in Hitler's Reich who would see it as their own solution as well as the solution of Eastern Europe. For such a confederation would inevitably co-operate with Germany out of sheer self-interest, but it would not be monopolized by Germany.

Britain and France should come out with a counterprogram for Europe. The mere restoration of an independent Poland or Czecho-Slovakia is not worth the blood of Europe's youth. The defeat of Hitler is worth a lot of blood, because if he wins, it is ruins for millions. But you can't beat a horse with no horse. What the people of Europe who are fighting this war are looking for is not the old order, but a new one. They want a new Europe, with the end of Versailles, the end of Balkanized Eastern and Southeastern Europe, the end of Chauvinism, Communism, Hitlerism, persecution, oppression, mendacity, militarism, despotism, tyranny, gangsterism, secret police, sloppy-minded and weak-livered democracy, forced migration, exploitation and general hell.

If Hitler's opponents are going to win this war, they have got to know what they are fighting for. They must show those who suffer so much a vision of a world where the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount mean something again in practical politics. Getting rid of Hitler is all very well. Hitler himself is the illustration that there is no such thing as a vacuum.

The Allies can't take Hitler's peace terms, but they had better put forth a vision of their own.

"Some of the larger Wall Street brokerage houses will restore the Christmas bonus this year."—News item.

The Christmas bonus! Boy, is that reachig away back against the fence for a hard-hit memory?

Yes, Virginia, there was a Christmas bonus. Your little friends may tell you there wasn't, but they are wrong, Virginia.

It was away back in the era of silk shirts, $1,000 country club initiation fees, two-million-share days, de luxe yachts, penthouses, orchids, those big imported automobiles and all that.

Away back when everybody knew somebody who knew something about a big stock market pool, when even the office boy was picking polo ponies, when the secretary hung her sables in a chain lunchroom in complete disregard of the "Watch Your Hat and Overcoat" sign, when everybody was taking a flyer in radio and when a man who couldn't stir his friends with a tale of how he had just made $20,000 in a quick turn was a nitwit.

The bonus was the conventional thing then. Bonuses were thicker than border violations are today.

And the Christmas bonus was the big item. It was as dependable as the Christmas tree, the popcorn balls, the Yuletide greeting cards and the necktie joke. Every employer felt opulent, loose and benevolent. He was Kris Kringle all over.

Everybody was remembered from the first vice president down to the fifth deputy doorknob polisher and assistant washbowl scrubber. To have cut it out would have meant rioting in the streets.

The boss got as big a kick out of giving away money as the staff did in getting it. He began to sprout white whiskers around Thanksgiving time. By December 10 you could hear him reciting "On Comet, on Dancer, on Prancer and Vixen." From that time until Christmas Eve he just signed checks and hummed "Jingle Bells, Jingle Bells, Jingle All the Day."

By 1927 it had become a habit. The boss actually looked forward to spraying the staff with dough. He would have been sore if you had asked him to stop.

Then came the crash, the New Deal, the SEC, the WPA, the All-you-can-eat-for-forty-cents movement chaos, planned economy and everything up to and including Hitler. For years many people have thought "bonus" was the name of a prepared dog food.

Let's go over that item again . . . "Some of the larger Wall Street brokerage houses plan to restore the Christmas bonus" . . . Yipee! . . . It will be a ducky idea—even if they don't carry it out.

Rhymes Of Wall Street

Charlie bought himself some stock
Of the investment kind;
He now is out a lot of dough
And has a troubled mind.
Willie bought the other type—
It was deep in the red.
But it leaped up some 40 points
And put him far ahead.

Shetland Suits
HAND TAILORED

$35

If you've admired the character and shaggy appearance of fine, imported "rough" fabrics, you'll marvel at these domestic Shetlands, which look as good, but sell for so much less. An extraordinary value for such a fine hand tailored suit. Trousers have reinforced crotch and silk-lined knee to hold shape. There are herringbones, diagonals, heather mixtures, browns, tans, greys and blue-greys from which to choose.

Reich Industry Getting Ready For the Worst

Export Houses Seek To Open New Markets In Russia, Balkans

Copyright by New York Times.

Berlin, Oct. 8.—German industry and trade are availing themselves of a short lull between the termination of the "lightning" war in he east and the start of actual fighting in the west for readjustment to war conditions.

A daily flow of war economic decrees, with further drastic restrictions on raw materials, indicates that the government is resolved to be prepared for the worst and to keep the people on minimum rations from the outset. There is conclusive evidence, moreover, that the food authorities are continuing to build up stocks of butter and other products.

Trade Figures Withheld

Foreign trade figures for August have been withheld for the duration of the war. It is understood, however, that the last peace month showed an increase in imports and exports, with supplies being rushed in from all countries, notably those in the west. September's foreign trade declined, even with neighbor countries, owing to monopolization of transportation for troop movement.

The government and business organizations are sparing no effort to develop a maximum turnover with the parts of the European continent not blockaded, taking advantage of the fact that for all the Baltic and Balkan countries the Reich has become the only buyer of their staple export products.

Seek Russian Trade

Moreover, efforts are being made to supply Belgium and the Netherlands with grain and other foodstuffs from the Balkans, although this plan is handicapped seriously by transportation difficulties.

Prominent export houses in Hamburg and Bremen, facing collapse of their overseas business for the second time within 25 years, are making feverish efforts to revamp their organizations for trading with Russia, the Southeast and Scandinavia.

The main foreign trade problem unsolved is the possibility of using Italy as a blockade loophole for overseas trade. Complaints are heard in industrial circles that Italian shipping lines are refusing German export shipments to North and South America for fear of complications.

Federal Engineers Seek Deposits of Strategic Minerals

Engineering parties in eight national areas are investigating sources of emergency supplies of strategic minerals, Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes announced yesterday. Investigations are the result of recommendations by the Army and Navy Munitions Board, he said.

Antimony, chromium, manganese, tin and tungsten are the minerals at which investigations are particularly directed. They are among those named by President Roosevelt when he recently called upon owners of commercial stocks of such resources to refrain from selling them to foreign buyers, because their value to America is coupled with a restricted supply here.

The Bureau of Mines pointed out that the outlook is not bright for disclosing large deposits of deficient strategic minerals of commercial grade.

Investigations are being carried on in Montana, Wyoming, Oregon, Washington, South Dakota, New Mexico and Nevada.

Fisherman Rows 2 Days to Shore

Matinicus, Me., Oct. 8 (AP).—Percy Davis, 58-year-old Portland fisherman, rowed his 15-foot boat 50 miles without food and only a pint of water, to land at Matinicus Rock Light today after a two-day pull.

When he lost sight of the schooner Eleanor in a fog off Cashe's Ledge Friday night, Davis plotted a course toward land by using the wind direction. He was suffering only a slight cold when he landed.

Newlyweds Narrowly Escape Death as Flames Sink Ultra-Modern Fokker Yacht in Hudson

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

The Q. E. D., Anthony Fokker's yacht of tomorrow, in which plane principles were adapted to ship construction, yesterday burned and sank in the Hudson River on the start of a honeymoon cruise for Mr. and Mrs. Richard G. Vance, of Westfield, N. J., friends of the plane designer and builder. Mr. and Mrs. Vance escaped by jumping into the water. One member of the crew is missing. The boat is shown above. Fokker is pictured in inset

By the Associated Press

Yonkers, N. Y., Oct. 8.—A bride and bridegroom of six hours, honeymooning to Niagara Falls on Airplane Designer Anthony Fokker's palatial "yacht of tomorrow," the Q. E. D., narrowly escaped death last night when the craft burned and sank in the Hudson River off Yonkers, forcing them and the crew of nine to jump overboard.

Although suffering minor burns, they were rescued by other boats, with the exception of one crew member—John Wannamaker, 42, of Yonkers, who was missing.

The honeymoon couple Richard G. Vance, Westfield, N. J., florist, and the former Paula Borchard. They were married in Manhattan at 6 p. m., and, after a wedding dinner, boarded the yacht—loaned to them by Fokker.

Off Yonkers, about 20 miles up the river, Capt. Lawrence Gamage noticed smoke pouring out of the after portholes. After the crew was unable to put out the fire, he gave the order to abandon ship.

The $200,000 110-foot yacht sank several hundred feet off shore, only her bow showing, apparently a total loss.

The victims floated in life preservers until rescue boats took them ashore. Wannamaker was last seen splashing and calling for help, but when a boat got to the spot, he had disappeared.

The Q. E. D. was Fokker's experiment in applying airplane design principles to shipbuilding. She was streamlined and of the lightest possible construction, with a special superstructure that enabled the helmsman to see in a circle, and disappearing davits and hatch covers. The Q. E. D. had triple screws, with one 800-horsepower and two 600-horsepower engines.

At her launching a year ago, she slid into the Harlem River mud and was trapped there for 24 hours.

Finns Belatedly Send Envoy to Kremlin Parleys

the Gulf of Finland, in addition to three others—the islands of Lanas-saari, Seiskari, and Tytarsaari, the demand for which, it is believed, broke down Russo-Finnish talks earlier this year.

Hogland Island is said to be of far greater strategical importance to Russia than to Finland, as it has two lighthouses, which light up the approaches to Kronstadt Harbor, the Soviet naval base.

The inhabitants of Hogland Island number only 725. The other three islands have a total population of 1,000, mostly fishermen.

Stockholm, Oct. 8 (AP).—Impending talks between Finland and Soviet Russia today brought the larger northern nations face to face with Russian expansion in the Baltic, which came on the heels of German-Soviet collaboration in Poland.

Though accepting the Soviet invitation to important talks in Moscow, Finland indicated firm determination to fight for her independence if necessary, since similar invitations to small Baltic states had resulted in sweeping concessions for Russia.

All Scandinavia Watches

It was regarded as significant that Finland chose to send to Moscow her Minister to Stockholm, since she and Sweden are linked closely and Scandinavia generally will watch the negotiations closely.

Paasikivi, a former premier, headed the Finnish delegation which obtained Bolshevik recognition of Finland's independence in 1917.

Finns asserted the trip of their envoy would be different from the visits paid in the last two weeks by the foreign ministers of Estonia and Latvia who came home with pacts allowing Soviet naval and air bases and troops on their soil and giving Russia trade concessions. A Lithuanian delegation is now in Moscow in on a similar mission.

Barracks Overflowing

Finns said their barracks were overflowing with reservists ready to defend the independence of 4,000,000 Finns who lived under Russian rule before the World War.

Finns declare that while their standing army was only 30,000 men, almost all adult Finns, including women, have had reservist training and the nation's terrain, studded thickly with forests and lakes, is well adapted to defense.

It was reported that 4,000 Soviet troops were concentrated on the Estonian frontier ready to march on Tuesday to man newly granted military bases. About 16,000 more troops were scheduled to follow and about 20,000 were to go to similar bases in Latvia.

Trade Pact Likely

Helsinki, Oct. 8 (INS).—It was believed here tonight the Soviets would seek an extensive trade agreement that might have the effect of displacing both Britain and Germany as Finland's biggest customers. With a population of 3,700,000, Finland's industrial production has risen more than 49 per cent since 1929—registering a quick recovery from the depression which still afflicts many other countries—and the overwhelming bulk of the country's surplus manufactured products, as well as raw materials, went to England.

In this respect the Soviets will have a strong bargaining weapon. Finnish exports to England since the present war began have been almost totally stopped due to German control over the western Baltic. Without the British market, the whole Finnish economy stands to suffer disaster.

Swiss to Keep War Issue Out Of Elections

Berne, Oct. 8 (AP).—Swiss Generalissimo Henry Guisan, who has a majority of Switzerland's voters mobilized into a citizens' army, ordered the European war issue kept out of the impending political campaign.

The election for the National Council, similar to the United States' House of Representatives, is scheduled October 28-29, and will be decided almost entirely by 500,000 men under arms.

Guisan, who obtained his promotion from Colonel to Switzerland's only general by parliamentary action in August, permitted soldiers to vote as they pleased but limited each political party's campaign within the army to an official declaration of its program.

Nothing may be included in the declaration which attacks the army or which is "incompatible with the correct relations between Switzerland and other states."

Reich Starts Repatriation Plan in Baltic

Estonia, Lithuania And Latvia Asked To Permit Recall

Copyright by New York Times.

Copenhagen, Oct. 8.—German evacuation of German citizens and minority members from the Baltic states to Germany, started yesterday when the German ministers to Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania applied for permission to follow up Fuehrer Hitler's Reichstag speech by starting the "people-exchange" immediately.

German transport ships have arrived at a number of Baltic ports and are ready to start the transportation. The first steamer, the Friedericke, is leaving tonight for Germany from Riga.

The German colony in Latvia, numbering 60,000 people, knew yesterday what would happen, while the Estonian group, numbering 16,000, first knew today, when the transports actually started and German ships arrived at Ahrensburg, Paernu, Tallinn, Riga, Libau and Windau.

Treaties are expected in the near future between Germany and the Baltic states regulating the payment for deportees' houses, farms, furniture, etc., left behind.

Those of the younger generation who are rather Nazified are enthusiastic. The older ones look on gloomily. The evacuation first comprises the young men of military age. The older or younger will be evacuated later.

Latvian Germans Invited

Copyright by New York Times.

Riga, Latvia, Oct. 8.—Fuehrer Hitler has sent to all Germans in Latvia, whether possessing German or Latvian passports, invitations to return to the Reich.

The invitation affects approximately 60,000 persons of German blood here, most of whom are members of families that have dwelt in this territory for many generations. Some are descendants of Teutonic knights who began colonizing the eastern Baltic in the thirteenth century.

It is not known whether the invitation includes the Volga Germans, Mennonites and other German colonies who left their homes and farms by the thousands a few years ago in desperate attempt to flee from Russia. A few thousand succeeded in escaping through Latvia but others were detained by Soviet troops and redistributed through the Soviet Union.

Some Praise Fuehrer

A month ago many Germans would have chosen to stay here, never having been in the Reich, but since the rapid elimination of German influence in the ease Baltic and the advances made by Russia, they have felt forsaken. Yesterday and today their faith in Hitler was revived; and Baltic Germans were heard exclaiming: "The Fuehrer has not forsaken us; the Fuehrer will provide."

The official German explanation, as given here, is that the repatriation is not connected with any agreement with Moscow or with Moscow's recent actions toward the Baltic states. Citizens do not believe the Nazi invitation comes as a coincidence.

Germans Recalled

Stockholm, Oct. 8.—A report from Tallina, Estonia, says only German citizens are compelled to leave immediately. Other persons with German ancestry have 48 hours to decide whether to go.

Asylum in U. S. for Spanish Refugees Urged as Part of 10-Point Rescue Plan

A ten-point program for aiding Spanish refugees—including efforts to obtain "right of asylum in the United States and its possessions for Spanish political refugees, to obtain surplus commodities from the American government and transportation on American ships for refugees—was advocated yesterday at the national conference of the Spanish Refugee Relief Campaign.

Resolutions addressed to this Government, the Spanish government and the Intergovernmental Commission for Refugees set forth the program adopted in the two-day conference which closed yesterday at the Harrington Hotel. Leaders urged an immediate intensification of the Nation-wide campaign to aid more than 200,000 Spanish refugees in France and North Africa.

The "critical plight" of the refugees was emphasized with aid from British and French curtailed by the war.

Program Set Forth

Elmer Rogers, editor of the Scottish Rite News Bureau; John P. Davis, executive secretary of the National Negro Congress, and Harold Lund, staff member of the White House Conference on Children in a Democracy, served as chairmen of the sessions when the following 10-point program was formulated:

"1. Continuation and extension of direct aid through the organization itself.

"2. Obtaining of American Government assistance in the form of surplus commodities to be distributed to Spanish refugees in France, North Africa and Latin American countries.

"3. Obtaining from the United States Government agricultural machinery and crop seed in the form of materials or through grants or loans with which to purchase them for agricultural resettlement of the refugees in Mexico, France, North Africa or such other countries as accept them.

"4. Obtaining the right of asylum in the United States and its possession for Spanish political refugees.

"5. Obtaining American ships for transportation of Spanish refugees to such countries as will admit them.

"6. Obtaining of admission to the United States on unused immigration quotas of such International Brigade members and their families as are unable to return to countries of their origin.

"7. Support for and assistance in obtaining legislation to make it possible for the United States to give financial assistance to refugees outside of its own borders, including Spanish refugees.

"8. Inclusion of the question of assistance to the Spanish refugees on the agenda of the Intergovernmental Commission for Refugees.

"9. Direct United States Government participation singly or with other governments against continuation of reprisals in Spain and for a general political amnesty to be controlled by representatives, official or unofficial, from democratic countries, this amnesty to be an immediate prerequisite of any return of the refugees to Spain.

"10. Establishing in the United States cultural projects designed to preserve the best of Spanish culture and disseminate it throughout the Americas."

French Sub Takes Nazi Freighter 1,000 Miles at Sea

Paris, Oct. 8 (U.P.).—The story of the French submarine which captured a German freighter 1,000 miles at sea and took it to Casablanca, as announced in a recent war communique, was revealed today by naval authorities.

Names of the submarine and freighter were kept secret. The submersible was cruising in mid-Atlantic when it sighted an unknown ship. The crew took up battle stations and headed toward her at full speed but warily, lest the ostensible transport be a disguised auxiliary cruiser.

She fired several shots wide of the ship and forced her to halt. Submarine officers went aboard and found that despite the absence of markings they had come upon a German transport.

Thereafter for several days the submarine kept the transport headed toward Casablanca. It was run by its own officers but under the closest surveillance of the submarine.

Latin-American Visitors Face Strenuous Schedule

Peace Delegates to Have Special Police Escort to Expedite Attendance at Many Functions Planned in Their Honor

Because their five-day stay here is to be one of the most strenuous ever mapped out for visitors by hospitable residents, the Latin-American peace delegates, who arrived yesterday, will have a special police escort when they are whizzed about to tea, to a tour of the Capitol, to lunch, to an interview with the Secretary of State, to dinner and elsewhere.

From their arrival at Union Station late yesterday afternoon, every minute of their stay here is packed with activity. Everybody seems to want to do something for the good-will group, which is making a Nation-wide tour under the auspices of the People's Mandate to End War.

The delegates include Senorita Susana Perez Irigoyen, of Argentina; Senora Lucia de Paula Fonseca, of Brazil, daughter of the Brazilian Ambassador to this country and Senhora de Martins; Senora Angele Acuna de Chacon, of Costa Rica; Senorita Mercedes Guerra, of Cuba; Senora Rosa Marcos de Ycaza, of Ecuador, and Senorita Yvonne Gonzalez Rincones, of Venezuela.

Things got under way last night with two dinners for the delegates. The Argentine Ambassador and Senora de Espil entertained in honor of Senorita Irigoyen, a pretty, charming young journalist for La Nacion, of Buenos Aires. She has many friends in Washington, among them Mrs. A. A. Berle and Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, whom she met in Argentina.

Espils, Miss Winslow Fete Delegates

At the same time Miss Mary Winslow, who is United States representative on the Inter-American Commission for Women, gave a party at her home in honor of several of the other delegates. This was a lively and gay affair, with some of the most prominent women of the Capital invited for dinner.

Among Miss Winslow's guests last evening were Mrs. Stanley Reed, Miss Mabel Boardman, Miss Katherine Lenroot, Miss Elizabeth Cristman, Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, Mrs. Thomas R. McAllister, Miss Mary Anderson, Mrs. James Helm, Mrs. Roosevelt's social secretary, who has just returned to Washington after a summer in the Middle West; Mrs. Ruth Shipley, head of the passport division of the State Department; and Miss Mabel Vernon, director of the People's Mandate Committee, who has been squiring the group about New York. Mrs. Thomas Burke, of Washington, who is chairman of the mandate for Latin America, was unable to meet them in Manhattan because of illness, but hopes to be well enough to join in the festivities and accompany the party on the tour.

Among those who joined Miss Winslow's party after dinner were the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. A. A. Berle, and Phillip Bonsal, of the State Department, and Mrs. Bonsal.

Today, the visitors will attend a luncheon given by the Committee of Sponsors for Washington, at which Mrs. Cordell Hull will be an honor guest. Tonight Mrs. Warren Robbins, who is an Argentinian by birth, will entertain at dinner.

Tomorrow, there will be an informal reception at the Brazilian Embassy after the women attend a luncheon given by the Women's National Press Club. Since the Brazilian Ambassador and Senora de Martins are not expected back from Panama City until later in the week, the Charge d'Affaires and Senora de Guimaraes probably will be hosts.

That evening Representative Caroline O'Day, an active worker in the cause of peace, will entertain the delegates at dinner at the Sulgrave Club. On Thursday they will have tea with Mrs. Roosevelt at the White House at 5 o'clock and then go to Oxon Hill for a tea which the Undersecretary of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles, still en route from the Pan-American Conference in Panama, will give at 6.

To Travel To West Coast

Thursday evening will see the ladies en route on the second stage of their tour, which will take them to Duke University at Chapel Hill, N. C., and to Atlanta. From there they go to New Orleans, Dallas, Fort Worth, Austin, Albuquerque, Los Angeles, Hollywood, Santa Barbara, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Chicago, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and Boston. November 22 they return to New York for a few days before sailing home.

All the delegates speak English. All are women of accomplishment. Senora de Chacon, of Costa Rica, is a practicing lawyer and writer, and did important work in reorganizing her country's school system. The Venezuelan delegate, Senorita Rincones, has just returned from two years of postgraduate work at the Sorbonne, and is the daughter of a former minister of education.

The party will be received by Secretary Cordell Hull this morning at 10 o'clock and will also visit Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and Labor Secretary Perkins. In between they will sandwich in visits to Greenbelt, Mount Vernon and other points.

The group is making a return visit, to repay the South American tour made by several American women last year in the interest of the People's Mandate. Mrs. Thomas Burke was one of the delegates, and the whole party traveled over South America by air. The Latin-Americans are touring by special car.

Vinsons Entertain With Dinner for Rep. and Mrs. Cox

The Associate Justice of the United States Court of Appeals and Mrs. Fred M. Vinson have returned to their apartment at the Wardman Park after spending the greater part of the summer at their home in Ashland, Ky. Their sons, Fred, jr., and James, returned with them.

Judge and Mrs. Vinson entertained informally at dinner last night in their apartment for Representative Edward E. Cox, of Georgia, and his daughter, Miss Gene Cox. The latter has returned to the Maret School.

205 Will Meet On Symphony

The 205 members of the special advisory committee of the National Symphony Orchestra Guild, composed of members of the Orchestra Guild and the presidents of various representative Washington civic and social organizations, will be entertained at its second tea-conference at 4 o'clock this afternoon by Mrs. Eugene Byrnes, president of the Orchestra Guild, in the Queen Elizabeth Room of the Raleigh Hotel. Mrs. William E. Humphrey and Mrs. Foster Adams will pour tea.

The advisory committee was formed at the first tea-conference, which Mrs. Byrnes gave at the Arts Club last Monday at the suggestion of Miss Mary E. Hughes, of New York City, an organizer and lecturer of national prominence who is doing special work for the National Symphony Orchestra. Its purpose is to stimulate a greater and more general support of the winter series of concerts by the National Symphony, which open Sunday afternoon, October 29, at Constitution Hall, with Dr. Hans Kindler conducting and Mariz Rosenthal, pianist, appearing as soloist.

Mrs. Hugh Butler Plans Meeting

Mrs. Hugh Butler has issued invitations to an open meeting Wednesday for a discussion on "Training for Leadership in Our Democracy," at 10:30 a. m. in the Alliance Room of All Souls' Church, Sixteenth and Harvard streets. It is preliminary to her fall course in platform speaking.

Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, former president of the D. C. League of Women Voters, is the chairman. Dr. Carl Taeusch, formerly of Harvard, and now of the Department of Agriculture, conducting farmers' institutes, will speak.

Other speakers will be Mrs. C. D. Lowe, president of the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers; Mrs. Jed Johnson, wife of Representative Johnson, of Oklahoma; Mrs. Nat Patton, wife of Representative Patton, of Texas; Mrs. H. B. Eberharter, wife of Representative Eberharter, of Pennsylvania; Mrs. A. B. Shattuck, beauty counselor; Mrs. Kenneth Holland, aviatrix and president of the Smith College Club; Mrs. Ernest Gruening, wife of the new Governor of Alaska; Mrs. Frederick J. Libby, past president of the Smith Club; Dr. Katherine UNorris, psychandist, Miss Mary Hawes, who wrote a series for The Post, on Central Europe, and Mrs. Charles Finisgalli organizer for the Delphian Society.

Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Brown Are on Trip to New York

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Franklin Brown, who were married on Saturday in the rectory of St. Peter's Church, are now on a wedding trip to New York.

The bride, the former Miss Mary Ellen Collins, is the daughter of Mrs. Cora L. Collins. The Rev. Paul Norris officiated at the ceremony, which was followed by a reception at the home of Mrs. Collins.

Mrs. Norris wore a blue taffeta dress with a corsage of red roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Naomi Farrall was maid of honor and Irvin Brown was his brother's best man.

Mrs. McLean Gives Party for Son and His Wife

Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean entertained at a party last night at Friendship in honor of her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Edward McLean, of Colorado Springs, who are visiting her.

It was a young people's dinner, with about 60 friends of the couple invited. Among the guests was Mrs. McLean, jr.'s sister, Miss Eleanor Meem who, with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem, visited the young couple at their Colorado Springs home last summer.

Miss Evalyn McLean is studying in New York this year and making her home there with a chaperone.

Skating Club To Open Season

Invitations to join the Washington Figure Skating Club, Inc., in its second skating season, which begins Sunday, November 19, will be sent to members and prospective members early this week, Dr. Christopher Meyer, president of the club, announced today. The club will skate at Riverside Stadium, Twenty-sixth and D streets, which has been completely remodeled and roofed over.

Booked to open tthe season at the stadium November 2 is the Ice Follies of 1940, a nationally famous ice skating show which will make its first appearance in Washington.

Plans for the Washington Figure Skating Club's second season are being completed. Thus far they include club skating sessions at the stadium ring each Sunday from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m., each Tuesday and Thursday from 5:30 to 7:30 p. m., and a special session for children from 8 to 10 a. m. each Saturday.

The Washington Figure Skating Club and the stadium have retained the services of Robin Scott, a young California professional, as skating instructor. Mr. Scott is a former United States amateur champion and has skated on a number of shows since turning professional a few years ago.

Dr. Leonard To Speak Here

Dr. Eugenie Leonard, vice president and organizer of the Junior College of San Francisco, and former dean of women at Syracuse University, will speak at a luncheon meeting of the Washington unit of the World Center for Women's Archives tomorrow at 12:30 at the Women's National Democratic Club, 1526 New Hampshire avenue. Mrs. Emil Hurja, president, will report on 1939 activities.

Dr Leonard, now attached to the Department of Education on a special assignment, is collaborating with that bureau and the World Center of Women's Archives in a series of radio addresses entitled "Gallant American Women," emphasizing the contributions of women to America's history.

Among prominent Washington women identified with the movement are Irene A. Wright, Grace Keller Cooper, Mrs. Lester Schoene, Gwladys W. Jones, Mrs. Mary Bethune, Mrs. David C. Coyle, Mrs. Lucy Howorth, Miss Fola LaFollette, Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, Mrs. Emily Neweli Blair, Caroline O'Day, Mrs. Luke Wilson, Mrs. Francis Parkinson Keyes, Miss Kate Abrams, Mrs. Carroll Stewart, Mrs. Lucile Foster McMillan, Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, Hon. Frances Perkins, Mrs. Helen Weed, Mrs. David L. Wing, Miss Earline White, Mrs. Louis D. Brandeis, Miss Josephine Roche, and Mrs. Cora Morre Robertson.

Among the objectives are the systematic search for source material dealing with women's lives and activities, including letters, diaries, speeches, pamphlets, manscripts, notes and memoranda, and to act as a clearing house of information with respect to the location and character of source materials in other libraries and institutions, and to encourage recognition of women as co-makers of history.

New Room Opens

Invitations have been issued to the opening on Thursday afternoon, October 12, from 3 to 5, of the Hispanic Room recently completed on the second floor of the Main Library Building of the Library of Congress.

Officers Give Party to U. S. Engineers

Throngs Fill Country Club for Function Lasting Two Hours

It was Castle evening yesterday, for a group of Engineers officers (the insignia of the Engineer Corps is a gold castle) and their wives entertained at a dusk-to-dark party at the Army-Navy Country Club for what seemed to be the entire Engineer Corps of the Army, plus a few others.

Hosts and hostesses were Capt. Charles F. Baish, Capt. and Mrs. Anderson Moore, Capt. and Mrs. David Ogden and Capt. Miles Reber. From 5 until well after 7, they received literally hundreds of guests in the main dining room of the club. Mrs. Moore wore a floor-length tea gown of irridescent blue and rose faille, fashioned with a full-flowing skirt, puffed sleeves and a heart-shaped neckline. With it she wore a corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Ogden was gowned in sky blue faille moire, floor-length, and fashioned also on period lines with a full skirt, basque waist and puffed sleeves. Her corsage was of American Beauty roses.

Mrs. McCoach Officiates at Tea

Officiating at the tea table during the afternoon were Mrs. David McCoach, jr., gowned in dubonnet with matching accessories and a clip of brilliants at the neckline; Mrs. Harry B. Vaughan, who wore plum color with accessories of a darker shade; Mrs. Robert G. Guyer, in an outfit of viking blue wool with a tricky hat to match; Mrs. William A. Mitchell and Mrs. William A. Snow.

Also at the tea table were Mrs. Howard Ker, wearing an outfit of black crepe with a necklace of large lipstick red globes to match her bright felt hat; Mrs. Patrick H. Tansey, gowned all in black velvet with a cluster of small diamond ornaments at the left shoulder; Mrs. Clarence L. Adcock, also wearing a black velvet costume; Mrs. Raymond A. Wheeler, Mrs. Willis E. Teale, Mrs. Earl E. Gesler, Mrs. Albert C. Lieber, Mrs. Peter A. Feringa and Mrs. Patrick H. Timothy.

Friends Surround Gen., Mrs. Kutz

Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Charles Kutz were surrounded by friends and accompanied by their son-in-law and daughter, Capt. and Mrs. Tenney Ross. Capt. and Mrs. John Person, who have just come back from Berlin, were being welcomed.

Others noted were Lieut. and Mrs. David McCoach 3d, Mrs. Robert Ralston and her daughter, Miss Betty Ralston; Col. and Mrs. W. A. Wood, Col. Stuart C. Godfrey, Col. and Mrs. Francis K. Newcomer, Maj. Walter F. Vander Hyden, Capt. and Mrs. Joseph F. Battley, Capt. and Mrs. Charles W. Stewart, jr., Capt. and Mrs. Herbert D. Vogel, Capt. and Mrs. James G. Christianson, Capt. and Mrs. John R. Hardin, Capt. William C. Baker, jr., Lieut. William C. Hall, Miss Dolly Baish, Capt. and Mrs. Frank M. Albrecht, and many others.

Adele Smith to Be Married Saturday

The marriage of Miss Adele Katherine Smith, daughter of Mrs. Ernest N. Smith and the late Mr. Smith, to Philip Stoddard Brown, will take place on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock at St. Alban's Church. Only relatives and close friends will attend the wedding.

Miss Elizabeth Seymour, daughter of the President of Yale University and Mrs. Charles Seymour, will be maid of honor for Miss Smith, who is a graduate of the Holton-Arms School and of Leland Stanford University. During the past two years she was manager of the Washington Gallery of the Museum of Modern Art, and prior to that was associated with the Phillips Memorial Gallery Studio House.

Mr. Brown took his doctor's degree at Harvard and held a fellowship at the Brookings Institution from 1936-37. At present he is a member of the staff of the Division of Monetary Research of the United States Treasury. He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Brown, of Harrisburg, Pa.

Dwight Davises Among Visitors To Navy Game

A number of members of Capital society journeyed to Annapolis Saturday to see the football game between the Naval Academy and the University of Virginia.

The former Secretary of War and Mrs. Dwight Davis were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Warren at the game. Others seen included Mr. and Mrs. Jasper DuBose, and Capt. William Monroe, who will leave shortly for the West Coast.

Commander L. J. Willse and his bride, the former Mrs. F. Haven Clark, mother of Mrs. John Roosevelt, were among the spectators. They lunched with friends in Annapolis.

Society Girls To Aid Chest

Younger members of Capital society, as well as debutantes from Maryland and Virginia, are, like their elders, doing their bit to help the drive of the Community Chest. Several will usher at the League's "keynote" luncheon to be held next Monday at the Mayflower.

So that they may be assigned to their respective posts at the luncheon, they will meet tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 at the home of Mrs. Wilson Lee, luncheon chairman. There they will also schedule visits to several of the Community Chest agencies.

Among those who will gather at Mrs. Lee's home are Miss Ann Wilkinson, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Theodore Wilkinson; Miss Nancy Glover, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, jr.; Miss Eleanor Meem, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem; Miss Alice Barry, daughter of Maj. David Barry; Miss Patricia Donovan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Donovan, and Miss Katherine Duckett Addison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Addison, of Mitchellville, Md.

Mrs. Chester G. Pierce, Mrs. Clarence J. Robinson and Mrs. Gardiner Boothe 2d, of Alexandria, and Mrs. Townley E. Gamble, Miss Ella Virginia Waters and Miss Alice Beuregard Diamond, of Montgomery County, will also be present.

Helene Dieterle, J. F. Mitchell Wed

News has been received of the wedding September 30 at East Orange, N. J., of Miss Helene Cecilia Dieterle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dieterle, to Jean Fischer Mitchell, son of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Mitchell, of Washington. The couple will live at Flushing, L. I., on return from a wedding trip to Florida.

The Rev. Arthur Herbert officiated at the ceremony, which took place at Holy Trinity Lutheran Church and was followed by a reception at Marlboro Inn, Montclair. The bride wore a satin gown trimmed with lace and a fingertip veil, which was worn by her grandmother at her wedding 50 years ago. She carried gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Miss Florence Dieterle was maid of honor for her sister and the Misses Dorothy Gillin and Mary Winters, the latter a cousin of the bride, were bridesmaids. Miss Jane Dieterle, another sister, and Miss Anne Winters were junior bridesmaids. Charles Potter was best man and ushers were Frank Robb and Henry Kenworthy of Washington.

Mr. Mitchell was graduated from Cornell University and is a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

Miss Nancy Gatewood, A. D. Warnock to Wed

Mr. and Mrs. William Beale Gatewood have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Nancy Warwick Beale Gatewood, to Aaron Degrauw Warnock, jr., of Paoli, Pa.

The bride-to-be is a graduate of the Roberts-Beach School at Catonsville, Md., and attended Sweet Briar College and Harcum Junior College.

Mr. Warnock is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Degrauw Warnock, of Meadow Hill, Paoli. He attended Montgomery Country Day School, Wynnewood, Pa., and was graduated from Avon Old Farms School, Avon, Conn. He attended the University of Virginia where he was a member of Phi Kappa Sigma, and is also a member of the Virginia Club of Philadelphia and the Merion Cricket Club.

Mrs. Drury Has Tea in Honor Of Son, Fiancee

Miss Loretta Offutt Will Be Married at St. Matthew's Church

Mrs. Peter Drury entertained at a tea yesterday afternoon at her residence here in honor of her son, Paul Horkon Drury, and Miss Loretta Offutt, whose marriage will take place on Saturday at St. Matthews' Church.

A large bowl heaped high with autumn fruits decorated the tea table, which was centered with long green tapers. Mrs. Drury wore a black chiffon gown with a panel of Irish lace down the front.

The guests included friends of the young couple and members of their wedding party, who are Mrs. J. G. C. Conroy, Miss Lucy Offutt, Miss Anne Marie Offutt, Miss Connelia Offutt, Mrs. Francis D'Ouville and Miss Frances Starner. Victor H. Hermann will be best man, and the ushers are Lamar Brown, Paul Borden, Harrington Slaughter, William E. Offutt jr., and John Kent.

Mrs. William E. Offutt, mother of the bride-to-be, assisted at the party. She and Mr. Offutt will entertain the bridal party at dinner on Friday evening following the wedding rehearsal.

A breakfast at the Hotel Mayower will be held after the wedding on Saturday.

Jewish Women To Meet Here

Two regional conventions of important Jewish women's organizations are scheduled for this week, both to be held at the Washington Hotel. The Mid-atlantic States Conference of the National Council of Jewish Women will open this afternoon and the annual convention of District 8 of the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods tomorrow afternoon for three-day sessions.

Mrs. Benjamin Spitzer, of New York, will address the opening meeting of the council at which Mrs. Edward Sonneborn, the president, will preside. Harry Green, executive director of the Associated Charities, in Baltimore, will speak tomorrow afternoon. Mrs. Harry Roller, general chairman, is being assisted in arrangements for the convention by Mrs. Mark Lansburgh.

Mrs. Morris Cafritz, president of District 8 of the Federation of Sisterhoods, will preside at its meeting. A feature of the two conventions will be a joint banquet in the Mayflower ballroom Tuesday night. Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, will be the guest of honor, and Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, the guest speaker. There will also be dancing and an operetta presented by the Baltimore Council.

Dr. Elmer Kayser, professor of European history at George Washington University, will address Wednesday afternoon's meeting, and a tea at the home of Mrs. Cafritz will follow.

Mrs. David Simon is president of the local Sisterhood and Mrs. Hechinger and Mrs. Frederick Pelzman are cochairmen of the convention arrangements. Mrs. Burnett Baer has charge of reservations for the banquet.

Mrs. Hill Bride Of G. L. Estes

Mr. and Mrs. George Lawton Estes, whose marriage took place Saturday at Front Royal, Va., have gone to their cottage at Fort Valley, in the Massanutten Mountains for a short stay and will return to Washington after November 1 to reside at 4801 Connecticut avenue.

Mrs. Estes is the former Mrs. Margaret Hill, who for more than ten years was hostess at the Women's City Club. She is the widow of the late William Bartlett Hill, who was prominent in shipping circles in Australia, and is the granddaughter of Capt. Hugh Halcrow, who sailed his merchant fleet from Scotland to Australia in the early eighties.

Mr. Estes, who came here from St. Augustine, Fla., is a former president of the Florida Bankers Association and now is with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Miss Betha Butts entertained a few close friends of the bride at a dinner at her home in Georgetown the evening before the wedding. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. W. Shannan, of the Front Royal Presbyterian Church, at the manse.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Should College Woman, 37, Frontier Nurse, Wed Man of 50, Who Is Carpenter and Trapper?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I would ask your opinion about a puzzling letter I have received from a woman relative, aged 37, who is serving as a visiting nurse in a remote Canadian outpost. She is a college graduate who studied nursing after she finished college and later qualified for surgical work and health service. In her letter she asked if I would advise her to marry a trapper of 50, who is also a carpenter and has just completed a new home over which he asks her to preside. He has been on his own since the age of 17 and has been in the Far North for more than 20 years.

Neither of them has been married before and neither has any dependent relatives. The nurse is comely and serene, has always been fond of hiking, camping and "roughing it," and if any woman of her background and education would adjust herself to frontier life, I believe she could. I have never seen the man, not even his picture. But she writes that he is a sturdy, attractive chap who looks much younger than 50.

She doesn't say anything about his intellectual equipment. However, I have personally known trappers who were more companionable to me than most of the lawyers, doctors, professors and clergymen of my acquaintance. I am strong for outdoor men, as compared to dyspeptic desk workers, but, on the other hand, I am not blind to the unhappy matches which city women sometime make with wranglers on dude ranches and with guides in fishing camps. And a lifetime job as a trapper's wife strikes me as a pretty rough assignment for a city-bred woman who is fond of symphony concerts and pretty gowns.

In her letter, the nurse clearly indicates that she realizes the man would not fit gracefully into her family circle, which consists chiefly of professional people. And it is my impulse to tell her that an educated and experienced woman of 37 is under no obligation to select a husband who will resemble her male relatives, if she has found a man of different type whom she loves and respects. But as a mere man, and an unmarried one at that, I hesitate to advise a woman about how to choose a husband without getting an expert opinion. Sincerely yours, BACHELOR RELATIVE.

Things to Consider In Making Decision

DEAR B. R.: If this woman would be marrying the trapper because she has found in him a thoroughly congenial companion—such as she did not find (presumably) either during her college years or in her traditional circle of friends—then only a person who subscribed to highly artificial values would say her nay. But if she is tempted to marry him only because she is lonely and starved for affection and friendship; or if she would be marrying him in a spinsterish panic, because he is the first man who has asked her, or because she now believes he represents her last chance at matrimony—then, I think she should be urged to arrange a visit back home, during which sojourn amidst conventional surroundings she should think his offer over very carefully, before reaching a final decision.

Whether she could make a satisfactory permanent adjustment to frontier life with a woodsman husband would depend very greatly upon the factors which induced her to undertake that existence. If she had been drawn to the frontier in the first place because it seemed to hold the answer to certain indefinable needs of her spirit; and if she found herself strongly at peace there, as she never had been in more familiar haunts; and if, in addition, she also found there a man of sympathetic nature (even if dissimilar background), who likewise belonged to the new environment by choice and not by necessity, and who had been drawn there and was held there by reasons similar to hers—then I think she might be fulfilling her natural destiny in marrying him.

But if she had gone to the frontier in line of duty, or out of curiosity, or just to be doing something different, and was inescapably lonely and at loose ends there in her leisure hours and had fallen in with a manual laborer of limited mentality, for sheer lack of choice in the matter of beaux, and was thereafter touched and tempted by his humble suit, even while recogniizng clearly the fact that they hadn't much in common aside from their loneliness and their happenstance residence in the same outpost—well, in that case, marriage probably would be a sore mistake.

The woman is intelligent, obviously. She possesses manifold capabilities. She is adventurous and resourceful. With these qualities, she could never be happy married to a man of dullard provincial type. Confirmed spinsterhood, for her kind of woman, would be distinctly preferable to such a fate. But married to a kindred spirit, she could be happy anywhere. So, in deciding whether to marry the trapper, she should be far more concerned with the personality of the man than with her relatives' reactions or with the mode of life which would await her after marriage.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Whooping Cough Grows in Importance As Menace to Children

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

WHOOPING cough has gradually moved up in importance as a danger to children. This is not because it is more frequent or serious than it used to be, but because those childhood plagues of other days have been divested of their horrors. Diphtheria formerly had a death rate three times that of whooping cough. For the 1931-1935 period in the United States, that ratio was almost reversed, whooping cough claiming three deaths for every two from diphtheria.

Parents frequently give voice to the plaint that there are so many vaccinations to be given that the baby's early years are quite taken up with these troublesome procedures. But, in the first place, they are not so very troublesome to the baby and certainly not harmful. I only wish there were half a dozen more methods of vaccination I could recommend—a preventive inoculation for measles, rheumatic fever, infantile paralysis, mumps. I wish I could more wholeheartedly recommend the vaccine against scarlet fever.

Prevention of whooping cough has been attempted by the use of a vaccine. The vaccine is made from the Bordet-Gengon bacillus, which is quite generally accepted as the cause of whooping cough.

As an example of results, the record of the Whooping Cough Control Clinic at Evanston, Dr. Sauer's own home, may be cited. Every six months since 1934 children (average age, nine months) have been vaccinated against whooping cough. In all, 1,377 children have been so vaccinated. In that group 10 children have contracted whooping cough. In a control group of 1,100 children, living under the same conditions, but who were not vaccinated, 120 cases of whooping cough developed.

In conclusion, it may be said that if any parent wishes to try the whooping cough vaccine, he should be encouraged, but it is not yet so well proven that its use should be enforced.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

Dutch Ship Returns With War Refugees, Including Merle Oberon, Mrs. Carnegie

New York, Oct. 8.

OF ALL THE ships which have scuttled into this port crammed to the gunwales with refugees from the madness overseas, I naturally took the warmest interest in the Dutch liner Neiuw Amsterdam, for she carried my sister, niece and brother-in-law who had spent one of those "happy summers abroad." Barbara, the niece, was fretted at missing the first week of her junior year at Cornell—Pierre, the brother-in-law, was no end put out at missing the first engagement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in which he fiddles.

Alice Hughes

Only my sister was completely happy—home again after a worried wait of eight days in the harbor at Rotterdam, with her family intact, and the soil of the United States again under her feet. But the most joyous reunion I saw was when Ernst Lubitsch, the great movie director, who was aboard, clasped his wife to his buzzim. Their little baby, with its nurse, were among the survivors of the Athenia—so it was a three-way parting finally made one. It was really a beautiful sight to see.

Merle Oberon, the lovely movie star (no doubt with an eye to the cameras), wore a gas mask right into New York Harbor—a very handsome one of red suede it was, the gift of her director-husband, Alexander Korda, still making films in England. She wore a very tailored black and white suit, with a brown, felt hat, and upheld the movie reputation for beauty and smartness. Incidentally, Oberon had no less than 27 pieces of baggage, which is also in the great tradition. It included one jammed with gems, which nearly blinded the poor customs man who looked at it.

Attracting no attention at all, seemingly, was Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, widow of the famous steelmaster, who had been spending the summer at Skibo, as usual. But then, she's only rich. She was never in the movies.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN — Mr.

Whalen can have his World's Fair—the best fair in these parts is the annual event at Danbury, Conn., now winding up its hullabaloo in spite of bad weather. At Danbury we inspect wondrous livestock of the four-legged type, and enjoy a real midway of the good old-fashioned kind. We have Lucky Teter and his mad automobiles and crazy motorbikes doing insane stunts on a horse track—We have a real fat lady, something Flushing entirely fluffed. I may be old-hat, but give me Danbury any fall.

And if that isn't tough enough, the annual rodeo has busted lose at Madison Square Garden, featuring cowpunchers, and bearing down this fall on "Eight Beauteous Sponsors," daughters of Southwestern cattle barons, who will do decorous and lady-like stunts on horseback. So you can easily see that our fall is anything but dull. If the Beauteous Sponsors are too classy, we offer you Miss Sydna Yokley, girl calf-roper of Madison, Tex.

Word has gone forth here that there have been far too many doubtful "war pictures" in our daily gazettes, and that the bosses are going to return to that fine old staple, "the girl picture." Seems like a ripe hunch to me—with maybe an occasional shot of Gary Cooper and Ty Power to please the other half.

IT SEEMS THAT every war must have a gingery girl who pleases the lads as our beloved Elsie Janis did in 1918. It now seems certain that the prime candidate of the new lot of British Tommies will be Gracie Fields, the Yorkshire lass whose annual income in Britain has topped anything ever achieved by an American girl. Ooo, how they love her!

Dorothy Liebes, the San Francisco Tornado and spark-plug of the Fine Arts Building at the San Francisco Fair, has been delighting her New York friends with a visit. She's learning Spanish, in view of a forthcoming trip below the Equator.

THE FAVORITE girlish gesture here these days is feeling the waistline to see if one of the new corsets is being worn. Those who wear 'em like 'em—the rest of us still straddle the fence. Please note the use of the adjective "girlish." That is very important in this connection, I should think.

Curry for Soup

A dash of curry powder helps the flavor of clear vegetable soup or meat broth. Add the powder just before taking the soup off the heat or sprinkle a few grains on top each serving.

Femininity Is Returning In Lingerie

Ruffles, Bows Abound; Seductive Negligees, Bed Jackets Noted

By Marshall Adams

The Post Fashion Editor.

THE UNDERCOVER world of fashion is staging a return to femininity with more ruffles and pretty pink bows than have been seen since the can-can dancers kicked up their shapely heels. According to a French lingerie expert, attached to a Washington trousseau and dress shop, this fall will be fraught with frothy, ruffled slips, appealing lace trimmed bed jackets and seductive negligees.

Marshall Adams

This buyer says that some of the less practical frou frou, of camisole slips, etc., which came out last year along with hoopskirts are passe. Lingerie is charmingly feminine now but more functional than formerly, since smoothly fitting bias-control lines are used in all the better slips and nightgowns. There is a practical, yet enticing little pantie girdle just out, called "Baby Pants," which takes the place of an evening foundation for slim youngsters. It is of chiffon, made with a lastex base which fits very tight once it's on but looks like nothing more than a hankie in the hand. There are baby ruffles and a silly pink bow as a final crib-like gesture for these "pants."

Bustle Influence

Bustle dresses have had their effect upon undergarments, too. Some of the newer white or tea rose satin slips have gentle back fulness and ribbons run through ruffle borders to keep in close harmony with sentimental bustling frocks. House coats also take to bustles. Some lovely taffeta and duvetine ones are shirred in the back, atop double rows of bows or puffs. Only tall slender young things should attempt this style, needless to say. The corseletted line of the new frocks is used too in a handsome black velvet hostess gown which features a waistline, back fullness and a romantic looking neckline outlined in pleated organza ruffles—like a feminine Beau Brummel's.

For devotees of fine lingerie who cannot walk into a store and get fitted immediately in a size 52, a Mme. Michel will come to their aid. For years she has been designing special custom made lingerie for women of either very tiny or Gargantuan proportions. This busy seamstress came to Washington from the Continent seven years ago and has been trotting about to exclusive homes ever since noting down "difficult" waist and bust measurements and incorporating them up into personalized slips, panties, gowns etc. Her imported crepes, georgettes and Princess laces are exquisite and her handwork is in the fine French manner.

New Colors in Leather

Leathers in soft textiles—like colors—are quite something in upholstery news this fall, and in current versions they are as pliant and workable as a fabric. Velvets for chairs and sofas are very smart, especially in combinations with chintz of all things! For example, quilted chintz covering for the inside of the chair with velvet for the outside.

Job Interview

"What are your qualifications for office work, Miss Blink?"

"Well, I graduated from high school, and——"

"Just a minute! Will you please walk over to that door and back? . . . Wait! A little more slowly. . . That's better . . . Well, you have a slight inclination toward swayback, Miss Blink. And another thing, you toe out too much. But these things can be easily remedied."

"I've enrolled in an esthetic dancing class, sir."

"Good! By the way, what thread stockings do you wear?"

"Three-thread—for daytime."

"In this office we prefer the two-thread . . . And I observe you are not wearing a snood. Now, I understand by Vogue that snoods are very good this fall."

"Yes, but the widow's weeds drape, such as I have, is really newer."

"All right. Now, will you please read this sentence?"

"I'll be glad to . . . 'Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers.'"

"Your enunciation is all right, Miss Blink, but there's a little flatness and monotony in your tones."

"I intend entering a speech class, sir."

"Fine! Do you have a radio personality?"

"Well, my friends have always told me I ought to go on the stage."

"All right, I'll have your voice tested later. Now please take off your hat . . . When did you last have a shampoo?"

"Just yesterday—and a wave set."

"Your hair needs brushing. We insist that the girls in this office have glossy hair. And I don't feel that your coiffure is just right for your type of face."

"Well, I intend to have a new styling——"

"Good! Another thing, you have on too light a powder . . . What nail polish is that?"

"It's the new Stop Light."

"It's a little too red. We prefer Parlor Pink in this office . . . Now, Miss Blinky, will you please smile? . . . That's good . . . Now, just a little more . . . Do you smile frequently, Miss Blink?"

"Well—I would be glad to do so."

"We are very insistent here upon having a smiling office force. . . . I trust you never lose your temper, Miss Blink, and that you are unfailing courteous, tactful and gracious?"

"Well, my friends all say I'm very easy to get along with."

"Good! . . . By the way, are you psychic?"

"Yes, a fortune teller once told me I was."

"Have you had any experience in reading men's moods?"

"Well—I have a bossy father, a neurotic brother and a crabby old uncle——"

"Fine! Are you charming?"

"I read all the books on charm—that is, all I can find time for."

"Do you play any musical instrument?"

"Only the French harp—but I'm good at charades."

"All right. Do you know how to eat an artichoke?"

"I—I think so."

"Have you a keen sense of humor?"

"Oh, yes, indeed! I have a marvelous sense of hmuror In fact, that's my strongest point——"

"Just a minute, here's something very important. Have you had any merchandising experience?"

"I don't believe I understand you."

"Do you know how to shop, judge values, find bargains, select merchandise?"

"Oh, yes, indeed."

"Good! My wife is very particular about having her shopping done properly . . . Now, that's all for today. You may hear from me later."

"Are you sure you have all the data about me you need?"

"Yes, everything—I believe . . . Oh, no, wait! There's one more little point. Have you ever had any training in typewriting or shorthand?"

Number of Dates Depends on Assets

How many dates do you rate with the men? Does their interest stop after the first one? If so, take stock of your liabilities and assets. Here are some dont's compiled from a recent issue of Your Life magazine:

"Don't wear a dress that is tight and slinky if you intend to spend the evening dancing. You'll look like an animated cartoon.

"Unless he gives you a lead, don't suggest going to the most expensive places in town. His pay day may be a long way off.

"If your dinner date is prefaced by cocktails, don't get too chummy with the bartender. He isn't interested in the story of your life, and it may annoy your date.

"If the combination of sidecars and Guy Lombardo's music gives you an urge to do a solo dance, or shoot olive seeds at the people at the next table, you'd better stick to tomato juice.

"Don't attract attention to yourself by screaming in a voice three octaves higher than normal, 'So I said to him' . . .

"Don't talk in italics, and avoid constant repetition of such adjectives as 'gorgeous,' 'marvelous,' 'divine,' 'heavenly' and 'but definitely.'

"Don't cut in on his conversation to tell your own favorite story. Let him finish his first."

Your Figure, Madame!

Rapid Eating Is Likely to Add to Weight Avoid 'Full Feeling' at End of Meal

THE ETIQUETTE books tell you it is not "good taste" to eat too fast. Of course, it's not—your taste is all in your mouth!

The taste buds are located on the soft palate and at the back of the larnyx. You taste sweets at the tip of the tongue, sours at the edge, salts at the tip and edge, and bitters at the root of the tongue.

But when you swallow food in a hurry you don't have a chance to savor its quality. A good percentage of the people who eat too fast eat too much and are overweight. In eating rapidly it is all too easy to ignore the appetite's feeble signal that you have had enough.

Nibble to Keep Company

Then, when you race through your meals and finish ahead of the others at the table, you imagine you haven't had very much and you nibble to keep them company. When you take a long time to eat, you think you must be having quite a lot, which is a decided help on a reducing diet.

There is still another disadvantage to fast eating. Those who rush through their meals develop a preference for highly-seasoned foods, which create a thirst and a desire for quantities of water. This breaks one of the first rules for reducing: to limit all beverages taken with the meals to eight ounces. Several glasses of water or other liquid with the meal increases the appetite and stretches the stomach. You need plenty of water, but drink it on an empty stomach so it will leave the stomach in five minutes.

Even though you eat slowly and observe the rule about water drinking, you will not be able to trust your appetite implicitly. You will have to drill yourself to leave the table before you have that nice full feeling which you mistake for the signal that you have had enough. When you have been in the habit of overeating, enough is too much. Leave the table while you still feel like more. In 1 to 15 minutes you will have forgotten about food.

Snacks Approved

If eating between meals makes dieting easier, I am in favor of it. When you get hungry between reducing meals, have a glass of skim milk, hot tea or some fruit. These between-meal snacks add but a few calories and will divert your mind from such dangerous subjects as steak with French fried potatoes.

And if sweets are what you miss most on the low caloric menus, have them. After you have had your fruit dessert, take a candy mint—the plain kind, not chocolate—and let it melt on the tip of your tongue. It won't count more than 25 calories and it is like a period at the end of the meal.

Belgians Speed Defense Lines On 2 Frontiers

Forts, Pillboxes And Canal on Guard Against Invasion

By the Associated Press

Belgium is working 24 hours a day plugging up her defenses in the hope of preventing a repetition of her invasion 25 years ago.

A three-line ring of steel armaments, troops and a canal form the little country's chief insurance against invasion.

To the east, where German troops marched through Aachen (Aix-la-Chappelle) in 1914, are the strongest fortifications, while troops stand guard to the west along the French border.

Dotted with anti-tank defenses, the only gap in the German border, Belgian advices said, was a section in the Ambleve River Valley southeast of Liege. Belgian military leaders believed this could be held by troops. Pillboxes are being constructed in this area.

Premier Pierlot said work was going on "24 hours a day" completing defenses.

France has backed up her border defenses with an extension of the Maginot Line and a complicated trench system.

A Belgian army of 100,000 men stands as a threat against penetration from either side. But the principal works are the Albert Canal, which runs from the Ardennes Mountains to the North Sea at Antwerp, and the Liege fortification line along 55 miles of the German frontier.

The water hazard was built as a military stronghold and to free Belgian shipping from dependence on the Netherlands.

The Liege line is based on fortresses at Eupen and Malmedy. They are linked by a system of trenches, blockhouses and machine gun nests.

Twelve forts around Liege command all roads and bridges leading into the city. The Battice forts stand half way between Liege and Aachen and at the northern tip of the Liege line are the Ebben-Emael defenses leading to the Netherlands frontier along the Maas (Meuse) River.

Reich Belgians Recalled

Paris, Oct. 8 (U.P.).—Belgians working in the German Rhineland have been ordered to return home and Germans working in Belgium have been instructed to leave, it was reported today.

These measures followed a further concentration of German labor battalions in the Aachen (Aix-la-Chapelle) sector, where Germany's Siegfried Line is being hurriedly completed between the Moselle and the Meuse rivers.

Italy Pushes Peace and Neutrality in the Balkans

tion in a "lebensraum" (living space).

Since the small countries of this area dread war more than they relish the thought of getting revenge for some old or fancied wrong, diplomats believed Italy would win adherents on a promise to help maintain peace and neutrality.

An authoritative Yugoslav source said the current negotiations were "only the beginning of something much bigger than a mere treaty."

Should Yugoslav and Hungary draw closer to Italy, diplomats said, Rumania and Bulgaria might follow suit.

Yugoslovia and Bulgaria agreed last summer to pursue a common foreign policy, while Yugoslavia and Rumania are old Balkan allies and neither so far has assumed foreign obligations without consulting the other.

Sphere Might Expand

Thus with Hungary and Yugoslavia as a starter, an Italian-led Balkan front might expand quickly.

Moreover, Italy in recent weeks has taken steps to win the confidence of Turkey and Greece, withdrawing troops from the Greek frontier in Albania.

Other cheering news in the Balkans has been the decrease of armed forces by Rumania and Hungary along their frontier.

It was disclosed tonight this action had been taken on the suggestion of Yugoslavia.

(In Rome, Virginio Gayda, authoritative Fascist editor, said the agreement was the result of Italian effort to circumscribe the European war.)

Rumania Calms Down

Copyright by New York Times.

Bucharest, Oct. 8.—Rumanian nervousness has subsided and the populations of northern Bukovina and Bessarabia, which feared the threat of Russian invasion, are no longer panicky.

The reasons for this were made clear today by the publication of an official statement that the Rumanian Minister to Moscow, George Davidescu, was received by Premier Molotoff yesterday and informed that the Soviet harbors no aggressive intentions against Rumania.

In the meantime, Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu's long stay in the Russian capital was followed with the greatest interest.

(Speculation in Belgrade continued to surround Turkish-Russian negotiations, and it was rumored a pact of mutual consultation regarding the Balkans will be signed.)

Both the Danube and the Black Sea are valuable to Rumania only so long as the Dardanelles are open. This forms a basis for Rumania's collaboration with Turkey, as well as with Greece.

German interests likewise demand a free mouth of the Danube and it is expected that relations with the Reich will become even friendlier. Rumania's agricultural products can be delivered to the Reich overland and via the Danube without war risk at rates 47 per cent cheaper than to other nations.

Germany is doing everything to facilitate trade with Rumania and to eliminate any difficulties. The political consequences of this German economic link are evident and Rumania believes any country holding great commercial interests here is interested in maintaining peace.

King George Tells British Navy It May Expect 'Long and Arduous War'

as a means of mobilizing Britain's industrial manpower in the factories for duration of the conflict.

In his message to the naval commander, King George said:

"I am glad I had the opportunity of visiting a portion of the fleet and its auxiliaries at a northern base. Having visited representative ships and establishments, I am impressed by the keen and cheerful spirit of the units and your determination to bring the war to a successful conclusion.

"Your task may be long and arduous, but I have every confidence in your ultimate success.

Airmen Decorated

"Please convey to all those under your command my high appreciation of their efforts and my sincere good wishes for their safe return to their homes."

While inspecting the fleet units, the monarch journeyed aboard a cruiser. He visited a coastal airdrome where he decorated a number of air force men who recently participated in attacks on the German navy in the North Sea.

Authoritative sources said the agreement contemplated with Russia envisages the export of tin and rubber from British Empire ports to Russia in exchange for Soviet help in facilitating the transport of butter, timber, bacon and other products from the Baltic countries with which the United States of Soviet Russia is now forging ever-closer relations.

It is also believed the Soviets would export some of their timber directly to England.

A few days ago it was disclosed that Russia had formally asked Norway, Sweden and Denmark to charter ships to the Soviets for the purpose of trade with Britain, and that Norwegian shipowners already had agreed to the request.

Closer Anglo-Soviet trade relations are envisaged as not only offsetting the German control over the western Baltic but also the increased materials Germany is expected to obtain from Russia under the Russo-German commercial pact.

The British "council of industry" project is designed to insure an adequate wartime labor supply particularly in the engineering, shipbuilding and munitions industries.

'No Peace' Says Press

London, Oct. 8 (AP).—Britain, in close consultation with her dominions and France, today deliberated upon a reply to Adolf Hitler's peace offer against the background of a press chorus of "No peace at the price of Poland."

"Hitler's proposals are so nebulous they must be greatly clarified before they can become even a basis for discussion," the authoritative British Press Association said in discussing the posiblitiy of a British reply when Prime Minister Chamberlain goes before the House of Commons Wednesday for his weekly war review.

"One of Hitler's difficulties is to find a channel through which to submit amplification or clarification of his speech. Signor Mussolini does not seem willing to act as 'postman.'

"Hints appear to have been dropped in Berlin that President Roosevelt might be asked to act as intermediary."

"Peace Is Off, War Is On"

In a statement made public today, Deputy Labor Leader Aruthr Greenwood asserted Britain "would gladly listen to any constructive and sincere proposals for peace but the truth is that Hitler has offered nothing seriously."

The ministry of food announced today it had requisitioned all stocks of margarine and cooking fats in England and that future imports would be requisitioned on arrival.

Prices were fixed at not higher than the average level during the seven days preceding September 4.

The step was regarded as preliminary to the announcement of rationing of butter, margaraine, cooking fats, meat, ham, bacon and sugar.

Trade Trends Watched

London, Oct. 8.—The difficulty of reconciling the interests involved in the British desire to respect Belgium's vital trading interests and the determination to enforce a strict blockade of Germany is engaging the attention of the two governments.

A Belgian trade delegation, which has been discussing the question in London, has returned to Brussels for a few days to consult with its government. The British negotiators are using the interval for the same purpose.

Georgetown Lutherans in 170th Year

Oldest Church of Its Faith Is Exhorted By Dr. Wade to Keep Spirit of Founders

Antedating the District of Columbia and the Constitution of the United States, oldest of its faith and second oldest of all local Protestant congregations, Georgetown Lutheran Church yesterday marked its 170th anniversary. The observance is being held throughout October and November.

The installation of the Rev. James T. Powers as assistant pastor of Atonement Lutheran Church, reports from the recent Baltimore Conference in Methodist churches, and fall rally day exercises also held the spotlight in Washington churches, many of which reported capacity congregations.

Assembling in the edifice at Volta place and Wisconsin avenue northwest, on a site once known as "Knaves' Disappointment," and where stood the original log cabin church, Georgetown Lutheran parishioners were challenged by Dr. William A. Wade, of Baltimore, guest speaker, to "carry on" in the spirit of their founders.

Otto Fischer Present

After the service, worshipers exchanged greetings with the pastor, the Rev. Harold E. Beatty, and Dr. Wade, standing near an age-cracked bell, whose toll once summoned the faithful to services in the log church. Carried away several years ago, the bell was returned to the church in 1937. Otto H. Fischer, who last July celebrated his fiftieth year there, attended yesterday's rites.

Graduate of Muhlenberg College and the Lutheran Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, Pa., the Rev. Mr. Powers was given the minister's charge by Dr. Amos Traver, president of the Maryland Synod of the United Lutheran Church, while the charge to the congregation came from the Rev. Edward Goetz, Zion Lutheran pastor, and president of the Eastern Conference. Dr. Howard E. Snyder, Atonement pastor, presided.

D. C. District Divided

At Hamline Methodist Church, delegates to last week's Baltimore Conference brought reports, including the fact that the Washington District has now been divided into two districts. Thirteenth street northwest having become the border line between churches of the East and West Washington districts.

Dr. G. Ellis Williams, former superintendent of the Washington District, now heads he Western district, and Dr. Edgar C. Beery, former presiding elder of the old Southern Methodist Church, Washington area, is superintendent of the eastern area.

Dr. H. W. Burgan, Hamline pastor, and Dr. Chesteen Smith were the ministerial, and Harry A. Havens and William L. Evans, lay delegates. The conference also added an additional district to the Baltimore and Hagerstown areas.

Parents Advised

Mothers and fathers of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church yesterday were urged to use "more intellectual effort" in religious instruction, as Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, pastor, launched a forum on religious education in the home and church.

Speaking during the church school hour, the cleric drew on his experience as pastor of the Community University Church, on the New Hampshire University campus, to advise the parents, many of them with high school and college-age children, that "we have made our young people emotionally loyal to the church but intellectually uninformed."

Later in the day members of the Youth Peace Seminar meeting at Mount Pleasant were told by Edmund Kanwit that "there will be no armistice in the present international conflict."

Expects Long War

"We can expect the war to be a long-drawn out and cold instrument of imperialistic national policy," said the University of Wisconsin instructor. "Domestic issues will hold great weight in the balance. Internal strife is a definite element in consideration of the future."

Decay in man's soul has been followed by a decay of decency and good faith, Dr. John K. Cartwright, rector of Immaculate Conception Church, said last night over WOL, marking the beginning of the Washington Catholic Radio Hour's tenth season.

"You cannot get along without religion," he declared. "It is not only necessary to eternal salvation, but also to good order, peace, civilization and culture, and even to common decency."

Rites Tomorrow For Mrs. Ashe, 83, Old Resident Here

Funeral services for Mrs. Margaret Henry Ashe, 83, a member of the North Carolina colony of Washington for a quarter century, will be held tomorrow at her home, 1512 Park road northwest, with burial in the family plot at Raleigh, N. C. She died Saturday.

Services will be conducted by the Rev. Paul Wilbur, rector of St. Stephens Episcopal Church, who recently married a great-grandchildren of Mrs. Ashe, the former, Miss Virginia Hamilton.

Surviving are a son, Edward Wilcox; a daughter, Mrs. Mayme Newlands, both of Washington; another daughter, Mrs. Edmund Jones, of Goldsboro, N. C., and a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Our Town: Washington Highlands Needs Transportation

If Washington Highlands residents are successful in their campaign to obtain either a bridge or a tunnel at the Anacostia River and the extension of South Capitol street, it is estimated a lot of time would be saved in travel to downtown Washington. Under the plan, with South Capitol street across the river, it would skirt Bolling Field on the side fartherest away from the river and run into Nichols avenue southeast near Washington Highlands. Nichols avenue, the main business street for both Congress Heights and Washington Highlands, is the main thoroughfare shown in the picture. With a bridge or tunnel, Washington Highlanders would not have to travel through Congress Heights and Anacostia to get downtown. The playground which will serve the area is indicated in the picture, but the exact location has not been announced because purchase of all the land has not been completed

2 Dead, 9 Hurt In Week-End Traffic Toll

84-Year-Old Virginian Dies After Being Hit At Falls Church

An 84-year-old Virginian was killed and a Washington man died of traffic injuries yesterday, while week-end accidents in and near the District sent at least nine other persons to hospitals.

Milton Caldwell, 84, of Raiford, Va., died at Homeopathic Hospital last night after being struck by an automobile at Falls Church, Va. Hospital authorities said he suffered internal injuries and shock.

James Washington, colored, 54, of 517 Marks alley southeast, died at Casualty Hospital of injuries suffered September 14 in a crash near Muirkirk, Md. He suffered compound fractures of both legs.

Patrick Murphy, 40, of Cottage City, Md., was at Casualty Hospital with a fractured left leg and a possible skull fracture after an accident on River road near Bladensburg, Md. His condition was described as serious.

In the District, James F. Dick, 24, of 921 East Capitol street, suffered a strained back when he was struck by a car as he repaired a flat tire on his own auto in front of his home. He was treated at Providence Hospital.

John Elmer Norfolk, jr., 8, of Mellwood, suffered a broken leg, scalp wounds and body bruises yesterday when he was hit by a car on the Marlboro pike in front of his home. First aid was administered by Dr. James I. Boyd, of Forestville, and he was taken to Providence Hospital by his mother. His condition was not critical.

The accident at Suitland occurred when a car in which four persons were riding left the road and overturned.

Mrs. Emma Smith, 51, of 214 Twentieth street northwest, was seriously injured in a collision near Potomac Yards on Route 1 last night with an automobile whose driver, police said, fled. Mrs. Smith suffered head, chest and leg injuries, and three colored occupants of the other automobile were treated for minor injuries at Alexandria Hospital.

Catherine Sullivan, 16, of 329 N street southwest, suffered a strained neck and leg bruises. William Edwards, 23, of 348 N street southwest, suffered body bruises. Jane Smith, 16, of 331 N street southwest, suffered a hip injury and muscle strain. Joseph Kaldenback, 27, of 338 M street southwest, suffered leg bruises.

All were treated at Providence Hospital.

George S. Reilley, 29, a cab driver living at 923 E street southeast, was charged early yesterday with failing to make a report of an accident and failing to give the right of way to a pedestrian, as result of an accident Saturday night.

Reilley's cab, police said, struck Clarence John Norquest, 21, of 2217 Shannon place southeast, as he crossed Nichols avenue at V street southeast. Reilley took Norquest to Emergency Hospital in his cab. Norquest suffered a possible fracture of the right forearm.

Repeal Is Indorsed

Area Grows Steadily Despite Handicap of Long Way to City

By Christine Sadler.

Draw a line south 4 miles from the Capitol and another due east 2 miles from the brick yards on the northern river edge of Alexandria. In the vicinity of their meeting place is found Washington Highlands—the "last outpost" of the District.

Those coming to the Capital City up the river strike Washington Highlands next after the U. S. Naval Observatory and Magazines, although the suburb can claim only a few blocks on the Potomac before Bolling Field takes over.

When South Capitol street is extended its full length through the District—rather than stopping at the Anacostia river, as it does today—it will put part of Washington Highlands in the Southwest. At the present time, all the suburb is in the Southeast. A block or more of the dividing street is graded through the woods stretching between Nichols avenue southeast and Bolling Field.

Unusual View of Dome

Sightseers out for unusual views of the Capitol dome might try standing on Nichols avenue and looking north through the graded area. The Anacostia seems to be high above Bolling Field, held up by levees such as one sees along the Mississippi. Across the Anacostia, Washington's long stretch of water front is visible, and all the built-up section of the Southwest. On rainy days, mist shuts out the dome and Washington Highlands appears "to be shut off from the mainland."

The area actually is shut off from the city because its residents have to go 6 miles through Congress Heights and Anacostia, and across Eleventh Street Bridge, to get to the Capitol that seems so near. Between 7 and 9 a. m and 4 and 6 p. m. traffic jams make the trip last about an hour—instead of the 15 minutes it is expected to take when and if the South Capitol Street Bridge is built.

A bridge over the river, or a tunnel under it, comes first in the wishful thinking of Washington Highlanders. An elementary school comes second.

Within the last year the Highlanders have obtained the Oxon Run interceptor, which has brought them sanitary facilities and been responsible for a rapid growth.

250 Families In a Year

"Mostly because of the interceptor we have had about 250 families build here in the past two years—a hundred of them in Bolling View, our new subdivision. Plans for more than 100 more are already definite." Maury T. Warren said yesterday. He lives at 3824 First street southeast, and is president of the Washington Highlands Citizens Association.

In the Oxon Run Valley, the Park and Planning Commission has been obtaining land for a recreational center development. The Oxon Run Parkway will extend all the way up the valley. In addition to beautification, the valley development will bring badly needed floor control.

On banks above the run, Warren expects early subdivision developments. Nichols and Atlantic avenues are zoned for business and the remainder of the section as residential. Scattered grocery stores, a filling station, and a barbecue stand are the community's business buildings today.

Many of the streets remain purely "on paper," although work is underway on Nichols, and it is hoped Fourth street will be opened up some more this year. The southern part of the section is still in farm land and homes in the built-up part are almost altogether of the frame cottage or bungalow types.

Two Churches Started

Two churches have been started in the area within very recent years—one by the Nazarenes and one by the Baptists. The latter is served by Dr. E. E. Richardson, pastor of the Baptist Church in Congress Heights, and is called a "mission."

Warren estimates between 500 and 600 families are scattered over the area and that the population has just about doubled during the past two years. The citizens' association, which has been in operation more than 12 years, meets in various homes.

"That's one of the main reasons we are eager to get a school building. We have no community center meeting place," Warren declared.

Another city the size of Washington might worry if a large section without sewer facilities, a school, or protection from floods were within its limits—but due to a lack of community consciousness such as is found in districts where voters have power, the Capital City's residents are scarcely conscious that Washington Highlands exists.

Washington Highlanders believe their future will be much brighter than their past. Members of the citizens association are sure of it.

1,200 Catholic Students Open Church Activity

Pledge Themselves To Warfare Against Ignorance, Irreligion

Twelve hundred members of the Catholic Students' Mission Crusade yesterday helped to launch the 1939-40 activities of the Conference of Clerics and Religious by pledging themselves to warfare against ignorance and irreligion.

Kneeling in the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception after a procession around the campus of Catholic University, they joined in mass and heard Brother Timothy Donarue, S. A., president of the conference, read the Crusaders' pledge to use peaceful weapons of prayer and study to further the cause of missions.

The mission crusaders represented local Catholic schools and academies, while the clerical conference consisted of members of the religious communities affiliated with the University, whose vice rector, Msgr. Patrick J. McCormick, in the sermon at mass, stressed the purpose of the crusade as being "to foster a zeal, a devotion, a holy enthusiasm in the missions and all they represent."

Represented were St. John's College, Gonzaga High School, St. Rose's Technical School, Holy Cross Academy, Holy Trinity High School, St. Cecilia's Academy, Notre Dame Academy, Immaculata Seminary, Immaculate Conception High School, St. Anthony's High School, Sacred Heart School, and St. Paul's High School.

The Rev. Fidelis O'Rourke, O.F.M., of the Franciscan Monastery, was celebrant at mass, assisted by the Revs. Owen O'Leary, O. F. M., and Giles Webster, O.F.M., deacon and subdeacon. Choristers from Atonement Seminary sang.

Bermuda and Bahamas Exempted on Visas

The British Embassy announced yesterday that United States citizens traveling to Bermuda and the Bahamas will be exempt from passport and visa requirements, pending further instructions from the foreign office. The announcement was made through the British consulate here.

Roosevelt Note Urges U. S. Employes to Give to Chest

A memorandum from President Roosevelt urging Federal employes to support the Community Chest campaign was made public yesterday by Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, chairman of the Government unit of the campaign, in announcing a meeting of the unit at 12:45 p. m. tomorrow in the Willard Hotel.

"For the past several years, Government employes and citizens of Washington generally have answered the call of those less fortunate than themselves through the Community Chest," said the President's memorandum to all heads of departments, commissions or agencies in the government.

"We are approaching the twelfth campaign of the Community Chest of Washington and in preparation for that campaign it is urged that great care be exercised in selecting those who will organize and supervise participation in this important work.

"Having in mind our past accomplishments, I am fully confident that the employes of the Federal and District governments will again support the agencies of the Chest as generously as their means will permit."

Gen. Hines announced that the following had already accepted positions as department chairmen in the drive.

Harry L. Brown, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; John Ihlder, executive officer, Alley Dwelling Authority; James E. Mangum, acting secretary, American Battle Monuments Commission; Norman H. Davis, chairman, American National Red Cross; David Lynn, architect of the Capitol; Daniel C. Bayre, director of statistics and information, Civil Aeronautics Authority; John Q. Cannon, Civil Service Commission; Edward J. Noble, Undersecretary of Commerce; H. P. Caemmerer, secretary, Commission of Fine Arts; Frederick J. D. C. May Get $92,000 for Welfare

Mrs. Ottenberg Hopes Money to Be Made Available For Reorganization

Although the Board of Public Welfare's request for $175,000 for a receiving home apparently has been vetoed by District Commissioners, hope remains that some part of the $92,000 asked for reorganization of the Child Welfare Division of the board will be granted, Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, chairman of the Child Welfare Review Advisory Committee, said yesterday.

The reorganization program, outlined in the report of Jacob Kepecs, made public in March, would cost an estimated $280,000, but would save taxpayers' money in the end through more efficient and economical operation of the division, she said.

The full $280,000 was asked in deficiency estimates in the spring, but only $37,500 was appropriated by Congress, she pointed out. In the hope that if less were asked all would be granted, the board this year asked $60,000 for increased board and care of children, $17,000 for additional personnel $10,000 for housekeeper aid, and $5,000 for convalescent children.

"It is not an economy to carry on a service that is not efficient and is not producing results it should," declared Mrs. Ottenberg, emphasizing there had been "no progress in ten years in that division."

"I don't think $280,000 is too much to ask for bringing it up to modern methods," she said.

Variety and Press Clubs Foster Notable Events

'Cavalcade of Thrills' Promises High Voltage; Capra's 'Mr. Smith' to Have Press Preview; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

WITH A TENTATIVE PROGRAM of 25 events scheduled for the Variety Club's "Cavalcade of Thrills"—for the benefit of the club's welfare fund, which already has performed such valuable humanitarian service in the National Capital—there should be excitement enough in Griffith Stadium on Friday and Saturday of this week to satiate everyone with a yen for gooseflesh, hair standing on end, rigid vertebrae and frozen veins.

BELL

The show will be divided into three hair-raising parts—the rodeo, motor car stunts and trapeze acts. To insure a swift pace, each unit has been put under the direction of an expert in that particular line.

In charge of the rodeo will be Jack Westcott, of Tucson, Ariz., who for many years has supplied Madison Square Garden, New York, with a majority of its stars. Westcott has wired the Variety Club officials in charge of the event that the stars of the Madison Square contests have been contacted and will come to Washington for this week-end.

As has already been made known here, the "Hollywood Suicide Squad," presenting the motorized blood-chillers, will be under the personal direction of Miss Ula Holt, who has doubled for most of the feminine stars on the West Coast when the going has gotten a little too tough for them. It was Miss Holt who organized the unit for a Hollywood benefit. It scored such a sensational hit that it was kept intact. Some of the "Suicide Squad's" hazardous feats will be crashing automobiles head-on, turning over speeding autos and plunging motorcycles through brick walls and flaming barriers.

The third division of the thrill-fest will consist of the aerial daredeviltry of the Flying Kimras, a French quartet noted for its skill in executing daring feats on the trapeze. The Kimras have appeared in every major city in the United States, with the single exception of Washington. This will be their first local appearance and will lend the "Cavalcade" the maximum in action and unique entertainment.

Tickets for the "Cavalcade of Thrills" should not be hard to find. They are on sale in all of the Peoples Drug Stores, the Sports Center, Variety clubrooms in the Willard, the Willard cigar stand, the Lichtman theaters, the Lust theaters, at Archie Engel's, 1406 F street, Irving's, Tenth and E streets, and, of course, at Griffith Stadium for the Friday and Saturday night performances and Saturday matinee. They are priced down where everybody can reach them—children, 25 cents; adults, 55 cents and $1.10 per copy. Hurry! Hurry! Hurry! You've never seen a show like this one, or a worthier cause to inspire your support.

As was forecast in this space many days ago, the National Press Club will sponsor an international press preview of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," Frank Capra's new production for Columbia Pictures, in Constitution Hall the night of Tuesday, October 17.

Arrangements on behalf of the Press Club were concluded with Columbia Pictures Corporation by Arthur Hachten, club president; Fred Perkins and Walter Karig, comprising the Press Club committee.

Invitations will be extended to the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, members of the President's Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps and members of the Senate and House of Representatives. The occasion, furthermore, will mark the public debut of the Press Club Chorus.

Representatives of newspapers in New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore are being invited to attend the picture's Eastern premiere and arrangements are being made for them on that day to hear a portion of the neutrality bill debate in the Senate, prior to a cocktail party to be held in the main lounge of the Press Club.

"Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" is heralded by those who have seen its "rushes" and rough-cut print, on the West Coast, as far and away the best thing Frank Capra ever has done. Since he already has been awarded three "Oscars" by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, "Mr. Smith" must be pretty good. It co-stars James Stewart, in the title role, and Jean Arthur—who appeared together in the same producer-director's "You Can't Take It With You"—in a story of a youngster sent to Washington to whip the old-line politicians at their own game. Scenarist Sidney Buchman is being superlatively lauded for the expertness with which he has stitched the drama together. Both he and Mr. Capra were Washington visitors last spring.

Constitution Hall, erected by the Daughters of the American Revolution to house events of a patriotic nature, as well as concerts and civic meetings, is a highly appropriate auditorium in which to present "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," the nature of the picture being what it is. The hall has a seating capacity of approximately 4,000. It is safe to predict that that will not be enough, come tomorrow week.

Those who failed to see her in "The Blue Angel" and so may have come to harbor a mistaken notion that Marlene Dietrich is a placid, repressed, slightly aloof actress, who finds it impossible to cut loose on occasion and raise what is conservatively known as a little hell, will have their eyes opened when they see her in "Destry Rides Again," a rip-snorting "Western," in which she is costarred with the hereinbefore mentioned Jimmy Stewart.

In this turbulent subject, the glamorous and usually glossily gowned Dietrich plays a dance-hall girl, who "cleans up" a gilded palace of sin in a brawl that it took five days to film. When she finishes the battle with a blazing six-gun in her hand, her chief sparring partner, Una Merkel, is reduced to a limp bundle of quivering flesh and she, herself, looks like something the cat dragged in!

I gather all this from the pictures appearing in the advance copy of Life, out today, sent me by the thoughtful Mr. Otis Peabody Swift, who denominates the cat-fight as the "last word in rough-house"—or something to that general effect. You won't know the old gal in this one and assuredly never again will she be looked upon as a fragile flower who can't take care of herself in a pinch.

History repeats itself. Having accepted a two-week engagement as "guest conductor" at the Hippodrome Theater in Baltimore, Phil Lampkin is being urged to remain indefinitely in that capacity, just as he was here at Loew's Capitol Theater, where his "guest conductorship" stretched out into more than seven years. We wondered in print a fortnight or so ago if this might not happen and now, sure enough, it has. Mr. Lampkin, it seems, has pumped up a lot of enthusiasm around the Hippodrome box office and probably will be on the podium there for some time to come. Nice going is what I always say.

Apology-Genuflection-Etc. Note

I take back everything I said about that papoose and his "fake" Indian summer.

A Little Spooning Introduces New Star

LESLIE HOWARD AND INGRID BERGMAN

as they appear in "Intermezzo, a Love Story," the new Selznick production, which already has established Miss Bergman as the outstanding "discovery" of the season. Now in her native Sweden—where, incidentally, she is one of her country's top-ranking screen actresses—Miss Bergman is being vigorously importuned to return at once to this country for further appearances before the cameras. "Intermezzo, a Love Story" is an early booking at Loew's Palace Theater

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Oct. 8.

MUSIC DEPT.: When Ambassador Bullitt returned to America recently he saw Sophie Tucker's performance in "Leave It to Me" and promised: "When I go back to Paris I'll send you some French tunes. I think you'll like them" . . . Last week, through the diplomatic pouch, the songs arrived, addressed to Mrs. Jim Farley, with instructions to deliver them to Sophie . . . Miss Tucker accepted them, but couldn't understand the French lyrics—and so she asked Felix Ferry to translate them. He read them and assured Sophie: "They're wonderful songs—real French tunes. But you can't sing them in public—when ladies are present."

CRIME DEPT.: Paul Meltsner, the artist, took his model, Marcella, to the Versailles last night to listen to Sophie Tucker . . . Sophie was wearing a large diamond and ruby necklace, with bracelet and earrings to match . . . "Those are wonderful jewels," the model sighed. "It'll be a great day when I own jewelry like that" . . . "Yes, it'll be a great day," the artist assured her. "It'll be known as the Day of the Great Tucker Robbery."

SOCIAL NOTES: Al Smith received a telegram of thanks from President Roosevelt after his C. B. S. broadcast in support of the President's neutrality bill . . . The wire was signed "Frank."

POLITICS DEPT.: In 1936 Herbert Farjeon wrote a song called "Even Hitler Had a Mother" for his London revue. The Lord Chamberlain banned the song, because it was insulting to the head of a friendly nation . . . Last year Farjeon tried it again—and then once more, in April of this year. But each time the Lord Chamberlain banned it . . . Now, however, official approval has been accorded the song, and all London is singing it: "Though we may be furious with Hitler—And his ways be far from nice—Let's remember, when he was littler—Someone called him 'angel-fyce.'"

MOVIES DEPT.: The Hays office now is pondering over the propriety of one of the scenes in the forthcoming Marx Brothers movie, "A Day at the Circus" . . . In that scene a young lady grabs a string of pears from Groucho Marx and puts it down the front of her dress. Groucho stares at the young lady's chest and sighs: "How can I get those pearls back without consulting the Hays office?"

LOCAL NEWS: John Steinbeck arrived in town recently . . . Jim Farley will represent the Federal Government when the North Beach Airport is opened October 15 . . . Senator Mead, of N. Y., is interceding with the State Dept. in behalf of the 400 American students at Scot universities who are stranded here without passports . . . Cab Calloway and Todd Duncan, who portrayed Porgy in "Porgy and Bess," will appear in "Little Joe," the new Lyn Root musical . . . For the first time in five years Paul Whiteman will return to the New York night club scene. His band opens at the New Yorker Terrace Room October 17 . . . Because of his new job with a life insurance company, Stewart McDonald may soon resign from his post as Federal housing administrator.

BUSINESS DEPT.: Some members of the board of directors of the Ballet Russe suggested that the word "Russe" be eliminated, because of the Soviet-Nazi pact, and that its name henceforth shall be "Ballet de Monte Carlo" . . . S. Hurok, the general manager, vetoed their suggestion. "In the first place, six different nationalities are represented in the troupe," he reasoned, "and, secondly—pact or no pact—Russian caviar is still good, no?"

LAW DEPT.: When Fritz Kuhn's bail was raised to $50,000 the Asst. Dist. Atty. whispered into the judge's ear the source of his information concerning Kuhn's planned flight from this country . . . The source of that information was the Federal Bureau of Investigation . . . Kuhn's case will be set for trial before General Sessions Judge Saul Streit. He will decline to preside at the trial. The case will be tried before another excellent jurist, James Garrett Wallace.

WAR DEPT.: (1) A few months ago Winston Churchill told some New York newspaper friends that he would not accept a post in a war cabinet unless he was satisfied that Chamberlain meant to carry through a war to a finish, with no sell-out peace . . . (2) Lord Beaverbrook, in the Stork Club last night, stated that he did not expect Germany's first attack to be through Holland or Belgium. He said Hitler's first thrusts will be at Palestine and Asia Minor.

'Star Maker' Shifts Antics To Columbia

Bing Crosby, Louise Campbell, Ned Sparks, Linda Ware, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Laura Hope Crews, a long list of additional principals and more youngsters than you could shake a stick at, this week perpetuate the fame of Gus Edwards, famous song writer and vaudevillian, in "The Star Maker," based on the story of his life, on the screen at the Columbia Theater.

Almost as nostalgic in content and treatment as "Alexander's Ragtime Band," this Paramount subject deals with the early days of vaudeville, Edwards' creation of his long line of "kid acts" and an eventual emergence into the present, with its radio and symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall. That is where Dr. Damrosch comes in, as conductor of the huge orchestra with which Linda Ware sings and insures her future career. Linda's mother, played by Laura Hope Crews, meanwhile is proving that a former grand opera prima donna can "wow 'em" in the two-a-day.

Many of the old-time song hits are introduced during the action, a majority of them sung by the star. There is also a potent vein of comedy to balance the struggle and heartache of Bing and Louise Campbell, his wife, in their climb to the top.

The usual short-reel subjects augment the feature—which, by the way, it would be well to see, if you haven't already enjoyed it.

Trans-Lux

The Trans-Lux Theater offers 75 minutes of splendid entertainment for the current week. This popular newsreel theater is outdoing itself with first-run, top-notch, war films. Topping this end of the bill are excellent scenes; the French invade the Saar region, the Maginot Line is reinforced and French bombers whirl into action.

Further bits of importance in the news include last rites for Cardinal Mundelein in Chicago, Secretary of State Hull again warning Americans abroad and the huge salmon run in Oregon.

In the world of sports thrilling events are headed by unusually good pictures of the World Series opener at the Yankee Stadium. In rapid succession comes Challedon winning at Havre de Grace, football with Notre Dame-Purdue, Pitt-Washington and Mississippi-Arkansas. Fashions for the ladies run to fall shoes while Lew Lehr (Hot Stuff) gags for the man who locates hot springs with weeds.

Horse lovers will thrill with the well-done picture story of the life of "Seabiscuit" based on the short story, "A Colt Was Born."

"Holland and The Zuyder Zee" is the locale for the travelog of the week. Donald Duck is back with continuous troubles, as he races through a "Fox Hunt."

Atlas

A diversified program of stage and screen features, to be continued through Tuesday, yesterday aroused the enthusiasm of capacity crowds at the Atlas Theater, 1331 H street northeast.

The Five New York Swingsters opened the bill with a group of spirited and solid popular tunes and were followed by Frank Hall, romantic tenor and master of ceremonies. After singing a cycle of his distinctive songs, Mr. Hall introduced Clifford and Jackson in an interval of "hokum" comedy, followed by Starr and Revel, who unfurled a routine of nicely stylized dances. Last, but not least in merit, were Len Manning and his dog, Mitzi, presenting one of the cleverest cast of its kind now before the public.

The double-feature screen bill is comprised of the "Dead End" kids in "Hell's Kitchen" and Gracie Allen in "The Gracie Allen Murder Case."

Gayety

The Gayety Theater this week is presenting one of the real girlie shows of the season. Blondes, brunettes and redheads there are in ample abundance, with one Crystal Ames, a titian-haired charmer heading the beauty parade.

Miss Ames last appeared here several years ago and at that time was a member of the chorus. Since then, however, she has appeared in a George White's "Scandals" production and also in several of Broadway's favorite night spots. A pretty girl with a captivating smile, Miss Ames offers several musical specialities which are both original and novel in their presentation.

Since comedy numbers play a large part in every musical revue, we naturally anticipate a lot of nonsense and funny stories from the comedians, but often fail to give attention to those who put over the "punch lines" of the sketches. In this respect, we wish to pay tribute to Pat Paige, one of the outstanding "talking women" in burlesque.

The attraction is blessed with some fine singers in Paddy Cliff and Buddy DuBois. Both of these chaps show evidence of careful voice training and excellent taste in the matter of song selection.

Pat Paree, making her initial bow to local audiences, may, in a measure lack the color of her stage sisters, but nevertheless presents two beauty parades that are the personification of grace, charm and originality.

The comedy portion of the bill falls into the hands of Fred Binder and Jack Rosen, who, with the invaluable assistance of James X. Francis, Dixie Sullivan and the aforementioned Pat Paige, manage to offer comedy which, though often too slapstick, is funny.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Oct. 8.—When we write about training schools for young players, most people have forgotten that the Hardy pictures have been just that for the young cuties at Metro. With George Seitz, head master. After all, they've used Lana Turner, Ann Rutherford, Judy Garland, Helen Gilbert, and in the present one they've got three new ones — June Pressler, Margaret Early and Martha O. Driscoll who was signed after first day's rushes. Now, since Silvan Simon has done such a good job with Lana Turner in "Dancing Co-Ed" they've given him the Marx Brothers to glamourize. What fun? Huh!

HOPPER

Noel Coward told me since his autobiography was published he's had more than 5,000 letters along this line: "We read your account of how you and Ronnie Colman sat on a park bench, talking about your future, with Colman saying he thought he'd go to Hollywood and see if he could break into pictures. What decision did you really follow to make you both so successful? "Well, what?" said I. "Well, Ronnie got to Hollywood by way of Rome in 'The White Sister' while I just kept on working."

When Mae West was asked to write her autobiography she said: "Me write the story of my life, when I haven't started living yet?"

With producers crying because they have no outside audience, it's nice to know that Tay Garnett is going right ahead with his own picture called "World Cruise." He took background shots in the Far East for that one, and has photographed in those backgrounds at least 2,500,000 people. Can you see the standing line, when in front of the theater it says: "See yourself on the screen in 'World Cruise'?"

Because Harry Carey has gotten seven cuttings of Alfalfi from his ranch, even though it's near Saugus and the floods washed over it several years back, he's been called to Washington by Department of Agriculture to help broadcast his findings about soil erosion. His helpers on the ranch are Navajo Indians. He's had no servant problem since they've been with him.

With everyone dieting, Isabel Jewell, who almost kissed her career good-by because she was too thin, has gained 25 pounds in a couple of months, by concentrating foods which contain kelp and calcium. I wouldn't advise doing it without doctor's prescription.

Extras love working for Charlie Chaplin, because he doesn't actually get going until he's been on a picture six months. Other day they did a scene with Paulette, who carried a basket of washing on her head. She asked extras what they thought of it. They said: "Good." Charlie said: "Lousy." They took it 20 more times.

What a laugh to hear that the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia is designing clothes for American women. When she was visiting here her clothes were anything but smart.

Some members of the famous Monte Carlo Ballet drifted on to the "Abe Lincoln" set for the polka dancing scene. The ballet was disbanded after the death of Pavlowa. It once numbered 75 members, now has less than two dozen, because no one has or will take her place, ever.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Oct. 8 (NS).—Dorothy Lamour's 21-year-old heartbeat, Robert Preston, is going to get himself a permanent screen sweetheart—for over the week-end Paramount announced that Bob and Patricia Morison are to be teamed in not one, but several love stories. It's been a long time any studio has paired off a couple of players for a series, but who is to say it might not be a clever move? If you are out of swaddling clothes you can surely remember when Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien, Janet Gaynor and Charlie Farrell and Gilbert and Garbo were writing move history as famous sweetheart teams.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Of course, Para may be shooting a little high with Bob and Miss Morison, since neither is as well known as their predecessors. But be that as it may, the romantic experiment gets underway in "Moon Over Burma," a novel by Wilson Collison with a South Sea locale. In the meantime the gossips are closely watching the progress of the off-screen Preston-Lamour tie-up, since there is little doubt he's fallen hard for her.

Few people expected, John Barrymore least of all, that "My Dear Children" would develop into such a smash hit. It is now in its twenty-third week in Chicago and John and the producers are in no hurry to take it to Broadway. And why should they be when they have been so well treated in the Windy City? Most of the major companies have put in a bid for the film rights and now there is talk that it may be filmed in New York during its run there, with the members of the cast playing their respective roles. This would be the first time to my knowledge that a complete theatrical company worked in a play and a picture simultaneously. As for Elaine Barrie and John, well, there are things to be said on both sides and I still say the present Mrs. Barrymore did her best to keep John ship-shape for his movie engagements.

Robert Taylor, who has made such an issue of being cast in wrong pictures, may be glad to hear that M-G-M is reviving "Hands Across the Border." That's the story of the Canadian and West Point ice hockey teams that met annually to do battle in the name of clean sportsmanship. Commander Harvey S. Haislip has gone to Canada to get permission from the government to make this picture and, because it doesn't deal with war, no trouble is expected. Bob will play the champion skater from Canada while Robert Young will carry on as the West Point lad. Barbara Stanwyck, Mrs. Taylor in private life, will suffer no ill effects from her cut wrist which she sustained in trying to raise a window.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Gaylord Hausher has been interesting little June Preisser in spinach juice the last few evenings at Victor Hugo's. Maybe he has leave of absence from Garbo, whose comedy, "Ninotchka," makes new movie history for her; Orson Welles has taken to smoking the longest, blackest cigars in town. Maybe he's taking his cue from Zanuck, Leroy and Lubitsch, who smoke while they work; Gary Cooper gained 20 pounds and looks like a million. He's one person who doesn't mind putting on weight; put down to unusual foursomes Bob Lowry and Virginia Pearson, Earl Carroll cutie, with Bob's mother, Mrs. Hanks, and Gene Bradstreet, estranged bridegroom of Ann Cooper Hewitt. Remember what a crush the sterilized heiress used to have on Lowry? But now it seems the bridegroom and Lowry's ma are verra verra good friends; William Anthony McGuire finished his "Lillian Russell" script over the week-end and is ready to deliver it to TCF; Dick Purcell has been spending all his leisure time with Lya Lys; Nan Grey, detained here by Universal, will be unable to join Jockey Westrope, her bridegroom, at Belmont; Jerry Wald wires that Ann Sheridan has convinced Congress there's no sense in being neutral where she is concerned.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 8.—Out of this late and locally lamented World Series has emerged a stocky, bull-necked figure apparently destined for a decade of stardom in the big leagues. This was Charley Keller's World Series.

KELLER

Like an Horatio Alger script, the World Series always produces a hero. Definitely there must be some one ball player on the two teams who transcends the rest inasmuch as the World Series can take a decisive turn on one hit, one fielding feat or one pitched ball. Sometimes the World Series hero is the established star like Babe Ruth, Gehrig, Dizzy Dean, Grover Alexander or Goose Goslin.

But more often than not it is the run-of-the-mine player displaying a hot hand for the duration of the series—Johnny Rawlings, the despised week-hitting Giant infielder of 1921; Tommy Thevenow, so-so shortstop of the Cardinals of 1926; Pepper Martin, of the Cardinals of 1930, in the "Pepper Martin World Series."

Keller Solid Sort of Big League Star

They were ball players who figured unimportantly in the pre-series reckoning. But for the week that the World Series endured they sparkled brilliantly, actually surpassed themselves and walked off the field awash with new honors. And then with the start of a new season they lapsed into the mediocrity that had always been theirs—sometimes unable even to hold their regular place in the lineup.

Charley Keller, hero of the 1939 World Series, isn't one of these. At least all the evidence is that he is not. Charley Keller is a solid sort of big league star—no apparent flash-in-the-pan who put in a good World Series week magnified many times by the fact that his exploits occurred in a World Series setting.

It is in order to recount Keller's feats in this World Series. He led players of both leagues in batting with his .467 average. He made 7 hits in 16 trips to the plate. Only two of these were singles. Three were home runs. One was a three-bagger, one a two-bagger. His triple won the first game. His double was an important factor in the 2-0 victory in the second game. His two home runs virtually clinched the 7-3 third game. Today his home run broke a 0-0 tie and his tenth-inning single started the Yankees winning rally.

The Yanks scored 20 runs in the series. Charley Keller was directly involved in 11 of them—runs that he scored, batted across with his hits or helped to advance. In the field he was superb. Three brilliant plays in the ninth inning yesterday choked off the Reds' final threat. Today with two men on base in the ninth he drifted far into Joe DiMaggio's centerfield territory to haul down Simmons' long drive.

Umpire McGowan Praises Ex-Terp Star

Don't take our word for it that Charley Keller is a great ball player. Ask Umpire Bill McGowan, star of the American League staff. We did. Tonight as the train from Cincinnati rolled back to the East, Bill McGowan declared:

"Charley Keller is the only player in baseball with a chance to top Joe DiMaggio for the honors as the best player in the big leagues—and Keller's chance is a good one."

That from a man who is closer to the scene of action than any other authority in baseball save his fellow umpires. Bill McGowan wasn't carried away by any fresh memories of Keller's feats in this series as he spoke, carefully and deliberately.

"Put this down," said McGowan, "Charley Keller is the most savage hitter in the American League and that doesn't bar DiMaggio or Jimmy Foxx or Hank Greenberg. When I say savage I mean tough, grim and determined. I'd say he stands up there to the plate better than any other ball player I've ever seen.

"He scares a pitcher, honest. He isn't bluffing when he gets that scowl on his face. It's as native with him as eating is with you. Any time he's up there the pitcher is in a hole. He's a great natural hitter and he's always challenging a pitcher to get a ball close to the plate.

"If it is close to the plate, Keller turns loose a swing that is beautiful. Look at those forearms. That's where he gets his power. And those shoulders and wrists. He isn't tall, but he's stocky. And he must have a great eye. He has never squawked to me on a called strike yet, and I'll tell you why.

"Keller never lets any good balls get by him without swinging. That's the difference between a great hitter and just a good one. He hits the ball to any field—left center, or right. He'll make monkeys out of any outfield that tries to shade him in any way.

"Don't forget, Keller didn't get off to a great start in this league this year, which was his first. I've seen hundreds of ball players splurge when they came into the league and then fall off when the pitchers started finding their weakness. Keller continued to boost his batting average as the season grew older, and he kept boosting it until he finished the season with a .334 average.

"This World Series didn't make any difference to Keller. He wasn't fazed a bit. He stood up there and slugged like he knows how and he got those hits he deserved. He can't throw with DiMaggio. He can't cover the ground that DiMaggio covers. But he'll get down to first base faster than anybody in the league except George Case and Wally Moses when he's in shape. And he has a chance to outhit ever DiMaggio by so much that the best ball player in the American League may be Charley Keller."

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Cincinnati, Oct. 8.—Those muted wails you've been hearing these days come from Clark Griffith, of the Washington Senators, and Billy Evans, of the Boston Red Sox, who in one way or the other muffed chances to place Charles Ernest Keller in that pleasant enslavement known as a baseball job.

CONSIDINE

It is extremely doubtful if Keller today would bring less than $150,000 in the open market, not that the Yanks have any mind to shunt him to another team. A few short years ago, when he was a scorned substitute on the Maryland football team, a fair baseball player and a good college baseball player, his exclusive services could have been purchased for a zipper raincoat or the few bright beads that once prompted the Indians to sell Times Square.

Griffith, who has no more need of a Keller than a juggler has of his left and right arms, personally turned down the player who is now the sensation of the series. This is embarrassing, for it deprives the old guy of a chance to condemn his scouts. It was sometime in 1933 or early 1934 that Curly Byrd, the glamour-boy president of the University of Maryland and retired ghost writer of the living speeches of the late Gov. Ritchie, sent word to Griffith that he had a nice prospect playing on the Terrapin team. "Hurry," Dr. Byrd added, in English.

Engel, Cambria on Spoor of Estallela

In the absence of his two crack scouts, Joe Engel and Joe Cambria, who were in a Cuban jungle, tracking down the early spoor of Roberts Estallela, Griff journeyed to the Maryland campus, took a quick gander and said that Keller would never amount to much because he was "one of those short dumpy fellows." The old gent now contends that he looked at the wrong player, an interesting feat of astigmatism at that. Keller was disguised in a clean shirt that day, which might explain the mistake.

Evans frustration is more poignant. The head of the Red Sox farm system spotted Keller as a great ball player the hour he saw him. Billy then did what most scouts do when they want to sign a college player. He began to romance the kid's coach. The average college baseball player (and most of them are Homerically average) listen to their coaches when it comes time to make a decision whether to join this or that baseball chain.

The standard fee, I understand, is $500 to the coach, exclusive of the hastener which is slipped into the athlete's moist paw.

Billy has said that he did even better than this, buying the coach a new automobile. But after fearlessly spending that, and more, of Tom Yawkey's dough, he found that the coach thought that he was just some curious philanthropist making a swing through the county. Anyway, Billy was stunned one day, perhaps after delivering a box of candy to the coach's wife, to find that another sharp-practicer from the Yankee chain had gotten to (1) the coach and (2) Keller and signed the hairy collegian up for life.

Keller Got $14,500 to Sign With Yanks?

The deal was consummated by the Yankees' promise to pay off the mortgage on the old Keller farm. There is talk that Keller got $14,500 just to sign with the Yanks, but this seems too much to believe, particularly in view of the fact that if he made $7,000 with the Yanks this year he was lucky.

Keller went from Maryland to Newark in 1937, and led the International League in hitting, no mean feat for a guy of 20. Last year he finished second to Buddy Rosar, with .365 and 211 hits. He hurt himself in spring training this year, sat on the bench until mid-season, and finally got his break after Tom Henrich, the regular right fielder, went into a slump.

He went in, finished second to DiMaggio in hitting, and has done better than Joe in this series. Some experts believe that he will be as great as Joe, the apex of compliments.

Reporters have a tough time with him. He has a forbidding manner, a wordless suspicion of the press agents, and his squat broad-faced, fur-bearing body is hard to approach. He answers most interviewers' question with a grunt, goes about his business, is a silent, fierce competitor and can't miss being (if he's not already) one of the great ball players of our era.

Champions Stage Wild Celebration

McCarthy 'Happiest' Man in Baseball; McKechnie Saddened By 4 Straight Defeats

(Shirley Povich's story of the fourth and final World Series game will be found on Page 1 of the first section.)

By Charles Dunkley,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

Cincinnati, Oct. 8.—Joseph Vincent McCarthy, kindly 51-year-old leader of the New York Yankees, was the happiest man in the baseball world tonight.

Deacon Bill McKechnie, boss of his vanquished royal Reds, was the saddest.

McCarthy, with just a trace of a tear in his eye, joined with the Yankees in the noisest clubhouse victory celebration they have ever staged. He was supremely happy because his players had just presented him with a fourth world's championship and their ninth consecutive World's Series victory.

First of the Yankee players to storm into the dressing room were Shortstop Frank Crosetti, Left Fielder George Selkirk and Second Baseman Joe Gordon. After yelling out a few piercing "yippees" and "hurrahs," the real celebration started.

Harridge Extends Congratulations

Graying Art Fletcher, one of the coaches and McCarthy's first lieutenant, jumped on a trunk and broke out into the familiar song, "The Sidewalks of New York."

All the players joined in, with McCarthy standing beside Fletcher. After the last words of the song bounded into the rafters Fletcher jumped from the trunk to McCarthy's back.

In walked William Harridge, president of the American League, extending his hand in congratulation. McCarthy, rinsing a big chew of tobacco from his mouth, beamed.

"Just think, Mr. Harridge," he said, "this is our ninth straight world series victory. It's our fourth world's championship. No other team had even won three until we di it last year."

Praises Derringer, Walters

Asked if the series came out as he expected, McCarthy just grinned.

"Anytime you beat a couple of pitchers like Derringer and Walters," he said, "you have a helluva tough job on your hands. We beat a helluva ball club."

Suddenly, McCarthy spied Joe DiMaggio, whose single to right in the ninth inning broke up the game. DiMaggio, dripping wet from perspiration, was sitting on a trunk and sipping a cooling drink.

"The old "Dago" is O. K.," McCarthy said, "throwing his arms around the outfield star. "We'll have pleanty of spaghetti in San Francisco this winter."

Fletcher sat down beside McCarthy and screamed: "The Yanks are never beat: you can't beat the Yanks."

Keller Has His "Say"

Warren Giles, general manager of the Reds, shouldered his way through the packed room to congratulate McCarthy. Charlie Keller, the rookie home run clouting right fielder, grabbed McCarthy by the hand.

McCarthy looked up and blurted: "What the hell is the matter with you? This is the nineteenth time you've congratulated me."

All the Yanks, with three exceptions, left on a special train this evening for New York. Those who didn't head East were Coaches Fletcher and Earl Coombs and Pitcher Oral Hildebrand.

Up in the Reds' clubhouse was a team that knew it was whipped. Scarcely a word was said as the beaten players filed up. Eve their spikes made muted sounds on the metal steps.

Manager McKechnie went into his office and sat in the swivel chair with his feet on the window sill. He stared out the window for some minutes. Once he muttered a short string of bitter words, but it was hard to tell if he was thinking of

Packers Beat Cards, 27-20, Despite Rally

By the Associated Press

Milwaukee, Oct. 8.—The Green Bay Packers fought off a great Chicago Cardinal fourth-period rally to win a National Football League game here today, 27 to 20, before a crowd of 20,000.

For the first two periods and part of the third the Packers dominated play, holding the Cardinals in check in their own territory while they ran up 21 points. Late in the third quarter the Cardinals found a Packer weakness—pass defense. From that point on the Chicagoans went to town passing for three touchdowns and getting beyond the Bay 10 on two other occasions.

It was the combination of Quarterback Frank Patrick to End Bill Smith for most of the Chicago Cardinal gains.

The Packers scored early in the game on a play good for 93 yards. Forced back by a great Cardinal punt, Arnie Herber faded almost to his goal line and rifled a pass to Don Hutson, who outraced the Cardinal secondary to score. Tiny Engebretsen's kick was good for the extra point. The second touchdown came after a 50-yard march downfield, with Clarke Hinkle going over from the 1-yard line. Hinkle's kick for the extra point was good.

Andy Uram, former Minnesota star, raced 93 yards for the Packers'

Dodgers Helpless Before Onslaught Of Local Rookies

'Baughless' Team Shows Best Offensive in 2 Years; German, Farkas Stand Out; Ace Parker Completes 16 Passes for Total of 259 Yards

By Jack Munhall.

Washington's "crippled" Redskins yesterday were made the victims of the greatest individual football performance ever seen at Griffith Stadium and in addition their virgin goal line was violated not once but twice by Ace Parker and his Brooklyn Dodger teammates.

But there is no gloom today among the 27,092 thrill-crazed fans who watched in awe yesterday as the Baughless Redskins buried Brooklyn, 41 to 13, beneath their greatest offense since the damgiants were walloped, 49 to 14, two years ago.

Despite the incredibly good Parker, who completed exactly half of his 32 passes for a staggering total of 259 yards and personally authored the Dodgers' unavailing two touchdowns, the Redskins removed any doubt that they are ready to duplicate their 1937 world championship.

Retain Tie for Lead

With the victory the 'Skins remained in a tie for the Eastern Division lead with the Giants, who defeated Pittsburgh, 14 to 7, but what is more important they definitely discovered that Slingin' Sammy Baugh and Max Krause and Don Irwin and the other injured stars are not indispensable to their football cause.

Not as long as Ray Flaherty's club has backs like the veterans, Andy Farkas, Frank Filchock, Ed Justice, and the rookies, Jim German and Dick Todd and Wilbur Moore, or linemen like big Turk Edwards, Bo Russell, Wayne Milner and Bob Masterson. All these were the heroes of the amazingly decisive plastering the 'Skins applied to the hapless Dodgers.

But before any detailed account is given of the 'Skins' six touchdowns which were spread over the four periods, unlimited praise should be given to Virginia and North Carolina's Ace Parker, who in defeat, yesterday drew down the greatest applause of all from a partisan-Redskins crowd.

Great Passing Exhibition

Never on any football field was seen a more brilliant, a more unbelievable passing exhibition than that with which this Duke Universtly boy harrassed the 'Skins for full 55 minutes of the 60-minute ball game. When it is said that Parker completed 16 of 32 passes for 259 yards, only half his deserved glory is given him. For at least four of the incompleted passes charged against Parker were unjust; they were throws straight and true which were dropped by his bungling mates. Only two of his heaves did the Redskins intercept, even though they played him for a pass each time he dropped back.

Nor has it yet been told that Parker engineered the Dodgers' first touchdown by leading a 70-yard sustained drive, capped by his pay-dirt pass to Stan Kosel from the 9, or that he scooted over with Brooklyn's final 6-pointer with a twisting 27-yard end run, little short of sensational in its deception, speed and elusiveness.

Brilliant as he was, unquestionably the best back on a field where good backs were numerous, Parker still did not provide the cash customers with their biggest thrill of a stirring, never-dull parade of touchdowns.

Farkas Thrills Fans

No, it remained for sturdy Andy Farkas, of the bull neck and fireplug legs to draw the loudest gasp of astonishment from the largest crowd of the home season with a bit of masterful, open-field running reminiscent of the old days when incomparable Cliff Battles ghosted across local chalk lines.

It was while carrying across the Redskins' third touchdown that Farkas eluded four tacklers who had him pinned to the sidelines on the Dodgers' 40, where he had taken a pass from Filchock, left the pursuers flatfooted with a feint and a cutback and scooted untouched to his team's twentieth point. On this play Farkas tricked Kosel and End Herman Hodges and two other would-be tacklers and then got through unscathed, thanks, in part, to Masterson's

Ace Parker Sets Passing Mark For Pro League

Ace Parker, Brooklyn quarterback, smashed one and approached another of the two all-time National Professional League passing records for a regular season game established in 1937 by Pat Coffee, of the Chicago Cardinals, against the Chicago Bears.

By completing 16 of the 32 passes he attempted, Parker bettered Coffee's mark of 17 for 35, and his total gain of 259 yards compares not unfavorable with the 305 gained by Coffee.

The best percentage of completions ever made in the National League is credited to Sammy Baugh who connected with receivers 17 of 34 times in the Redskins playoff title game with the Bears in 1937.

Giants Rally, Beat Pro Pirates, 14 to 7

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Oct. 8.—New York world champion professional football Giants maintained their record of never losing a game in Forbes Field here today by defeating the Pittsburgh Pirates, 14 to 7, but the Pirates were on the edge of touchdown land when the pistol ended the contest.

Excited fans from a slim crowd of 9,663, smallest of the season, poured onto the field as, with but four seconds remaining, a Pirate pass was batted down on the Giants' goal line by Johnny Karcis.

Hoping to tie the score, the Pirates hurriedly lined up for another play but Field Judge Carl Rebele picked up the ball with one hand and yanked out a pistol and fired the signal ending the game with the other.

Pirate Protests Useless

The Buccaneers, who now have lost four straight this season, protested vigorously but Rebele explained he was unable to follow the play and shoot the gun simultaneously, and that the allotted 60 minutes had elapsed.

The veteran battery of Eddie Danowski, pitcher, and Ward Cuff, catcher, gave the Giants both their touchdowns. Cuffs, who crossed the Pirate goal line both times, monopolized the scoring by converting both points after touchdown from placement.

The Pirates—blanked in their last two starts and playing for the first time under Coach Walter Kiesling—tallied first, in the second

Deluge of Contest Answers Delays Naming Winners

Due to the tremendous response to last week's football guessing contest, The Post regrets that it will not be able to publish today names of the winners who will be rewarded with a pair of tickets each to next Sunday's Redskins-Pirates game.

If possible, announcement of the winners will be made in Tuesday's Post.

Cleveland's Rams Routed By Bears, 35-21

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 8.—Two rookies fresh from college ranks today led the Chicago Bears to a smashing 35-to-21 National Football League victory over the Cleveland Rams.

Bill Osmanski, ex Fordham star, and Bob McLeod, formerly of Dartmouth, paced the slashing Bear attack with three touchdowns in the second quarter. Osmanski was good for one of the scores on hard driving and McLeod accounted for the others via the pass route. His second wound up with a 40-yard gallop after he intercepted a Rams' toss.

POVICH

Tom Swope, Cincinnati Post, was named vice president, and Ken Smith, of the the New York Daily Mirror, secretary-treasurer.

Elected to the board of governors were: Ed Burns, Chicago Tribune; Al Horwits, Philadelphia Ledger; Shirley Povich, Washington Post, and Jim Gould, St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The association voted a $200 gift to Henry P. Edwards, retiring secretary-treasurer.

Indian Spring and Rodgers Forge Win State Team Matches

Argyle Club Title To Russell Jewell

Mrs. Ellen Kincaid Harris Wins Beaver Dam Women's Championship; East Potomac Team Routs Anacostia; Bogart, Steele in Finals

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Paced by its new Middle Atlantic P. G. A. champion, Cliff Spencer, with another great round of golf, Beaver Dam's team scared Indian Spring for a moment yesterday but couldn't stand the pace and the latter club entered the Maryland State Golf Association team championship finals with an 11-7 victory over the Four Corners course.

Meanwhile, Manor was upset by Rodgers Forge in another semifinal clash over the Baltimore layout, 12 to 6. After a convincing victory over Chevy Chase, Manor was highly favored over the hosts but outscored the winners in only one of the six matches.

Indian Spring and Rodgers Forge will meet over a neutral course next Sunday for the championship, with the locals at least a 10-to-1 favorite with their all-star line-up.

Spencer played the Indian Spring course in 67 strokes, four under par, and needed help on only one hole from his partner, Bobby Mills, to win three points from the host club's pro-amateur duo of Al Jamison and Roger Peacock. The Spencer-Mills team won each nine, 2 up, and the 18, 4 and 3, despite Jamison's 72.

Joe Balestri and Jim Gipe scored three more points in a second bracket upset over Ralph Bogart and Russ Hollebaugh, but the Landover lads scored only one point of a possible 12 in the next four matches and lost by the four-point margin.

Dick Meyer and Harry Pitt scored 2½ points over Otto Greiner and Fred Porter and Ralph Gibson and Max Taylor gained an even break but other than that the Manor line-up was punchless in the loss to Rodgers Forge. Al Treder and Burke Edwards lost all three to Pro Johnny Flattery and Dr. Ed Stinebert.

Rodgers Forge, 12; Manor, 6

John Flattery and Dr. Ed Stinebert (Rodgers Forge) scored 3 points to 0 for Al Treder and Burke Edwards (Manor); Otto Greiner and Fred Porter (Rodgers Forge) scored ½ point to 2½ for Dick Meyer and Harry Pitt (Manor). Stuart Windsor and Ben Burch (Rodgers Forge) scored 2 points to 1 for Tommy Bones and Alton Pratt (Manor); J. McCourt and J. Hospelhorn (Rodgers Forge) scored 1½ points to 1½ for Max Taylor and Ralph Gibson (Manor); Bollinger and Sweeney (Rodgers Forge) scored 2 points to 1 for Tom Corwin and Walter Talkes (Manor); Marshall Neel and Steve Palmer (Rodgers Forge) scored 3 points to 0 for W. J. Peters and H. L. Lacey (Manor).

Indian Spring, 11; Beaver Dam, 7

Al Jamison and Roger Peacock (Indian Spring) scored 0 points to 3 for Cliff Spencer and Bobby Mills (Beaver Dam); Russ Hollebaugh and Ralph Bogart (Indian Spring) scored 0 points to 3 for Joe Balestri and Jim Gipe (Beaver Dam); Claude Rippy and Bob Albertus (Indian Spring) scored 3 points to 0 for Jess Baggett and Forest Thompson (Beaver Dam); Volney Burnett and Jerry Hart (Indian Spring) scored 2½ points to ½ for Jack Palmer and R. K. Thompson (Beaver Dam); Buddy Sharkey and Arthur Urban (Indian Spring) scored 3 points to 0 for Doug Mattison and E. B. Heimer (Beaver Dam); Mel Shipley and Lou Harrison (Indian Spring) scored 2½ points to ½ for R. Woodside and John R. Miller (Beaver Dam).

ARGYLE

Clinging to the remnants of an eight-hole lead, Russell Jewell won the Argyle Club championship with a 3 and 2 victory over A. E. "Tony" Willmett, runner-up for the second straight year.

After the first 18 holes on Saturday, Jewell led his favored opponent, 5 up, and on the front nine of yesterday's final 18, he increased his margin to eight with a continuation of his near-par golf. Willmett rallied but the lead was too big and he lost on the thirty-fourth green. Jewell succeeds Orval Kaul as champion.

Fritz Williams won the second flight over Ray Amsden, 3 and 2, while A. O. Dooley won the consolation over R. E. Gable, 4 and 3. R. J. Posson won the third flight over William Fox, 1 up, and J. W. Hutchison the fourth over R. F. Price, 4 and 2.

BEAVER DAM

Mrs. Ellen Kincaid Harris, who won the Beaver Dam Club championship twice before her marriage, repeated yesterday, defeating Mrs. Florence Godfrey, 3 and 2, in the title round for her third victory.

Mrs. Harris was also medalist in the tourney.

EAST POTOMAC

Tommy Doerer's East Potomac line-up claimed the undisputed public links team championship after routing Anacostia, 29½ to 15½, over the winner's course. The series between the two clubs and Rock Creek was in a muddled state before the clean cut victory. East Potomac holds a victory and tie over Rock Creek.

The losers scored an upset in the first foursome, however, when the amateur duo of W. W. Seay and Bob Morris won 2½ points from the all-pro twosome of Mel Shorey and Doerer. The pros both picked the same day to be off their games, while the amateurs played good partners.

East Potomac, 29½; Anacostia, 15½.

Mel Shorey and Tommy Doerer (E.P.), scored ½ points to 2½ for W. W. Seay and Bob Morris (A.); Jack Harris and Joe Micker (E. P.), scored 2½ points to ½ for Calvin Lovins and R. Tanner (A.); Joseph Zekas and Harry Miller (E.P.), scored 1½ points to 1½ for B. Davis and Bill Carson (A.); T. W. Kines and M. Kerr (E.P.), scored 3 points to 0 for T. Smith and R. P. Hazelton (A.); A. Anderson and W. H. Dean (E. P.), scored 1½ points to 1½ for C. Litz and H. Bernlick (A.); B. C. Brown and A. M. Dupre (E. P.), scored ½ point to 2½ for O. M. Brown and Earl Bean (A.); Al Schneider and Russell Parks (E. P.), scored 2½ points to ½ for Gene Possom and M. Lukat (A.); Ray Taft and Joe Zoller (E. P.), scored 3 points to 0 for Ernie Hauser and George Graham (A.). Jim Leach and Leon Cole (E. P.), scored 2 points to 1 for C. Bragg and K. Keogh (A.); Joe Bailey and Fred Utterback (E.P.), scored 3 points to 0 for R. Miller and R. Williams (A.); Joe Alkons and J. Mallory (E. P.), scored 2 points to 0 for A. Gazette and M. Garvey (A.); Donald Hess and M. Appleberry (E. P.), scored ½ point to 2½ for J. Hardy and Jim McClendon (A.); R. Spearman (E. P.), scored 3 points to 0 for R. Jenkins (A.); J. Melton (E. P.), scored 1 point to 2 for W. Upright (A.); Leon Pound (E. P.), scored 3 points to 0 for M. Tawney (A.).

CONGRESSIONAL

Bill Wenzel won the second flight over Jack McCarron, 1 up, while Golf Committee Chairman Dr. O. U. Singer was a sixth flight victor.

Second Flight

W. H. Wensel defeated Jack McCarron, 1 up. Consolation—J. L. Townsend defeated Dr. Noah Pomeroy, 2 and 1.

Third Flight

V. P. Simmons defeated Dave Hunt, 4 and 2. Consolation—W. C. Hackman won by default.

Fourth Flight

Fifth Flight

R. Tichnor defeated W. L. King, 1 up, 19 holes. Consolation—George Ford won by default.

Ninth Flight

J. Sirica defeated J. H. Cook, 2 and 1.

ARMY AND NAVY

Ralph Bogart and L. V. Steele qualified as final-round opponents in the Army and Navy Club Championship, Bogart, the District amateur champion after his second club title, scoring over J. S. Phillips, 4 and 3, in the semifinals. Steele posted a two-hole margin over Frank Dunham, jr.

They will meet next Sunday over the 18-hole route.

WOODMONT

Dr. Milton Harris, the 1937-38 club champion at Woodmont, and Howard Nordlinger, a former champion, are final-round opponents at the Bethesda Club, and will meet over the 18-hole route for the title on or before next Sunday.

They both won semifinal matches with ease, Harris defeating Vic Zeve, 5 and 4, while Nordlinger scored by a like margin over Ellis Edlowitz.

Second-flight semifinal results included Dr. S. Bogdonoff over N. Wallach, 3 and 1; Stanley Glaser over Dr. J. Friedman, 3 and 2; Dr. Alex Chase over A. Mann by default, and Al Small over J. Safer, 4 and 2.

MANOR

Club President John R. Daily joined Manor's select group of flight winners in the annual club championship, the District barrister winning the fifth 16 over J. B. Crosby, 1-up, on the final green.

H. A. Westhaver won the second flight over Ray Fleming, 2 and 1, while B. D. Gamble defeated J. A. Cosgrove in the third finals, 3 and 2. S. E. Andrews defeated W. I. Hitchcock, 1-up, in the fourth flight, and P. B. Balzer won the sixth over R. Harrington, 1-up.

D. H. Lockwood won by default in the seventh bracket finals, while the eighth went to C. B. Van Dresen over R. M. Trezise, 2-up.

CAPITAL

Mrs. Leo Walper and Baroness deGruben are title round foes in the Capital Club Women's Championship, the District women's champion winning over Mrs. Edward Fox, 4 and 3, in the semifinals, while the Baroness defeated Mrs. J. Stanley, 2 and 1.

In the second flight Mrs. H. E. Davis won 3 and 2 over Mrs. J. Rosson, and Mrs. A. Lang advanced by defeault. Third-flight matches went to Mrs. R. K. Aten over Mrs. H. Lineweaver, 3 and 2, and Mrs. M. F. McDonald over Mrs. B. Quigg, 6 and 4.

Frank Gradoville put together a pair of 37s for a 74 and low gross in the blind bogey play, while the net winners were William Rohrey, 87—9—78; G. E. Getty, 91—13—78; A. Cleary, 100—22—78, and T. M. Hunter, 98—20—78.

KENWOOD

C. E. Lefoe and N. D. Larner tied with net 72s for the Kenwood Senior's Championship, the former scoring 88—16—72, and Larner, 85—13—72. They will play off Saturday for the trophy.

The club southpaw title went to J. F. Wallace, with 91—20—71 for a stroke margin over Dr. R. L. Harris, 84—12—72.

BELLE HAVEN

Mrs. Gardner Booth 2d and Mrs. Clark Brandt, medalist, will meet for the Belle Haven Women's Championship today over the Alexandria course at 18 holes. The winner will succeed Mrs. John Howard as champion.

Heurich Goat Of Big Upset In Soccer Loop

Marlboro Scores Three In Final Period, Beats Defending Champs, 3-2

Heurich Brewers, defending champions in the Washington and Suburban Soccer League, were the victims of an opening-day upset yesterday on the Monument Grounds when Marlboro scored three times in the final half for a 3-2 victory.

A lightning-like offense was responsible for Marlboro's triumph over the heavier Beermen. C. Buck, Parker and Wilson split the scoring. Heurich's single tally in the first half was made by McBain from penalty, and Sinenta added the final-half point.

Though Washington Sports Club took an early lead, it was forced to finish strongly for a 2-1 decision over Maryland Park P. B. C. The latter's only score came in the last period when F. Herath beat out four players to score after a sensational run.

Two members of the ten-team league were idle, and other opening scrimmages saw Silver Spring battle La Plata, Md., to a 2-2 stalemate, and Sandy Springs edge out the Democrats, 1-0.

G. W. Loses Regular Guard, John Kokoski

Emergency Appendectomy Expected to Keep Players Out for Season; Creates Serious Problem With Butler Game Coming Up

With less than one game as a regular under his belt, John Kokoski, husky little junior guard, was lost to the George Washington football squad yesterday, probably for the duration of the season, due to an emergency appendectomy.

He complained Saturday night of a slight "tummy ache," but yesterday morning his condition became serious and he underwent the operation shortly after noon. Last night his condition was reported as "good." He had not suffered abdominal pains of any kind until Saturday night.

Kokoski started in the Davis-Elkins game at left guard and played more than a half. He was considered one of the key men in the Colonial line which stood up remarkably well against the Senators, who failed to make a single first down on the ground.

Last year Kokoski played only as a substitute, both in the line and in the backfield, but last spring he stood far above all other guard candidates on the squad and he quickly won a regular position during the preliminary conditioning period this fall.

With Kokoski out, Coach Bill Reinhart has a serious problem on his hands in preparing the Colonials for their game with Butler at Indianapolis on Saturday. Tim Swett, most logical successor to "Koko," was kept out of action last week with an injured wrist and may not be ready to play against Butler.

Dean Reese, Frank Farkas and Howard McGlinn, all sophomores, are the other ranking guards. McGlinn was recently converted from fullback and as yet is not entirely familiar with his new assignment.

Pro-Am Play Starts Today

A field of at least 20 of the top pro-amateur teams of Maryland, nearby Virginia and this city will play in the Indian Spring match play pro-amateur tourney that starts today with an 18-hole qualifying round. Match play will follow tomorrow and Wednesday.

First money to the winning pro is guaranteed to be $200, with a set of clubs to the amateur, in addition to a $50 plaque for the event that is expected to be an annual affair. Gerald Grosner is posting the first pro prize and the plaque, while the medalists, finalists and semifinalists will divide the remainder of the purse.

The four outstanding teams include host pro Al Jamison and former intercollegiate champion, Johnny Burke, of Georgetown; Cliff Spencer and Claude Rippy, Wiffy Cox and Earl McAleer and Ed Oliver, the Buffalo Open champion from Hornell, N. Y., and Volney Burnett.

Meanwhile the fourteenth annual battle for the Middle Atlantic Women's Championship also gets under way with a qualifying round over the Washington Golf and Country Club course. A field of 52 will seek the title held by Marion Brown, but the Manor miss is determined to hold onto it for her first important victory of the year.

1st Pin Tourney To Gochenour

Karl Gochenour opened the District's competitive bowling season last night by winning the third annual "Pop" Wolfe Memorial Sweepstakes, a 10-game event rolled at Silver Spring and Rosslyn Alleys.

Gochenour rolled 1,359 to collect the $100 first prize over the field of 48 from three States and the District. Ray Barnes, of Richmond, was second and won $45.

Perce Wolfe, son of the tournament namesake, was third with 1,329 for $27.50. Lou Jenkins, of the host alleys, was next with 1,328 for $17.50; Al Wright, of the Bankers' League, tied for fifth with 1,320 for $9, a total matched by Tony Santini.

Block prizes went to Tony Petro, Baltimore, and A. Beavers, of the Navy Yard League, with a 359 game and 697 set in the first block, and two Baltimoreans, William Brozey and John Miller, 159 and 691 in the second block, all worth $6.50.

Riggs, Kovacs In Coast Finale

Berkeley, Calif., Oct. 8.—Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, and Frankie Kovacs, young Oaklander, will meet for the Pacific Coast tennis championship tomorrow as a result of straight-set victories scored in semifinal matches today.

Riggs blasted Jack Bromwich, Australian ace, off the court in 7—5, 6—3, 6—3, and Kovacs was brilliant in routing Ferenc Puncec, Jugoslavian champion, 12—10, 6—3, 8—6.

D. C. Ladies Win Hot Springs Tennis

Hot Springs, Va., Oct. 8 (AP).—J. Gilbert Hall, of New York, who had two legs on the cup of the annual fall invitation tennis tournament here, permanently retired the trophy today by defeating Samuel Gilpin, of Philadelphia, 6—2, 6—2, 6—3.

The ladies' doubles championship went to Katherine Winthrop and Margo Lee, of Washington, who defeated Louise Raymond and Florence Leboutiller, 4—6, 6—2, 6—1.

Lou Gorin Wins Weekly Table Tennis Event

Lou Gorin, the city's fourth-ranking table tennis player, yesterday won the weekly table tennis tournament, sponsored by the Chevy Chase Ice Palace courts. By virtue of his victory over Marty Shaffer, 21016 and 21-18, Gorin also took the lead for the trophy, which is to be given at the end of the series to the high-point scorer.

He now has 11 points to 8 for Bill Pierce, erstwhile leader, whom he replaced by yesterday's triumph.

St. John's Plays Central High Under Lights

10,000 to Attend Contest Tonight At Griffith Stadium

By Bill Burnett

Schoolboy football, heretofore confined to the daylight as far as Washington was concerned, receives its baptism by fire tonight at Griffith Stadium where two of the strongest elevens in the District, Central High and St. John's, clash at 8 p. m.

A crowd of at least 10,000 is expected to witness the battle. Last year the same game would have decided the city schoolboy championship, but the two teams were unable to play due to interhigh rules, etc. Central swept the 1938 interhigh series without the loss of a game, and the Johnnies, after whipping Gonzaga for the parochial title, went through their schedule with only one loss.

Same Teams

Despite the loss of numerous dependable performers, the teams now stack up almost as well as last year. Neither was beaten in its opener, the Mount Pleasanters tripping Gonzaga, 13-0, and St. John's rolling over Roosevelt, 14-0.

If Coach Hardy Pearce, of Central, is able to use Johnny Bredbenner, a line-plunging back up from last year's reserves, he will have almost the identical backfield he used for his devastating romp through the public school ranks last season. Bredbenner has been forced to take light workouts the past week because of torn ligaments in his shoulder. Coach Pearce expects the injury to be healed in time.

That will make Central's backfield read: "Benny Steiner, All-High selection, at quarterback; Harry Martin, nimble-footed senior, at one half; Jim Porter, concededly the best blocker in the high schools, at the other half, and Bredbenner at full. Capable and numerous replacements for these and Central's light, fast linesmen are available.

St. John's Line Heavier

St. John's, although boasting a eavier and more experienced line, has few, if any, tested reserves. Its ball luggers rank easily along with Central's, but here again a lack of substitutes is woefully apparent. Most of the Johnnie plays have been centered around Frank Cady, a 180-pound sophomore "find," who passes, kicks and runs with equal ease. Joe Brogan calls the signals, and a pair of the hardiest youngsters St. John's has turned out, Joe Daly and Tommy Chisari, hold down the other halfback and fullback spots, respectively.

One little item may be in Central's favor, that is unless Coach "Gus" Augusterfer has had his Johnnies working out in secret in the schoolyard at night. The Mount Pleasanters have tried night ball—they went through a light drill at Griffith Stadium Friday.

two more touchdowns in the third quarter to clinch matters.

The Rams took an early 14-point lead in the first quarter, capitalizing on Bears' fumbles, but were unable to withstand the battering attack turned loose by the Chicago team.

While it is almost never possible to explain satisfactorily just what happened when one football team routs another which was considered its near-equal, there seem to be at least two probable reasons for the Redskins' surprisingly decisive defeat of the Dodgers yesterday.

First, there was that preseason prediction of Brooklyn Coach Potsy Clark in which he allegedly said the Redskins wouldn't be a serious contender for Eastern division honors in the National Professional Football League because they were a "bunch of old men."

MUNHALL

Second, one of the biggest factors in the amazingly effective Redskin offense was a rookie named Jimmy German who only a few days was ticketed for release reportedly because the local club had a preponderence of promising young backfield material.

It seems to be an unescapable law of fate that whenever a manager of a professional athletic team in New York speaks out of turn his words bounce back in his teeth. Well remembered are the slighting remarks Bill Terry made of the 1933 Brooklyn baseball team, arousing the Dodgers to such an extent that they knocked the Giants out of the pennant.

It may also be remembered after the end of this professional football season and after the Redskins have been crowned world champions that the victory which started them on their way to the title was a confidence-zooming licking given the Dodgers on October, 8, 1939, at Washington.

In explaining why waivers had been asked on German, the speedy running and accurate passing halfback from Centre College, General Manager Jack Espey, of the Redskins, is quick to point out that the Redskins had not the slightest intention of cutting adrift such a prospect as Mr. German.

"Oh, no," quoth Espey, suspecting perhaps that the judgment of Redskin officials concerning valuable chattels might be questioned. "We just did what the major league baseball teams do when they want to find out from other clubs in the league what they think of a player that they already know is good."

To which we raise a quizzical eyebrow, Mr. Espey.

Irony at Griffith Stadium—When the hospital stretcher carriers were removing Ed Merlin, injured Brooklyn guard, from the sidelines during the fourth quarter, the Redskin band unthinkingly was blaring out the strains of "California Here I Come." Merlin is a Vanderbilt graduate.

Most popular spectator—The guy who so thoughtfully brought his portable radio to the game to keep the fans informed of the Yankees' clinching attack against the "Red Menace."

Strange Pass Interference Penalty . . . the one called against the Redskins in favor of Ace Parker when the Brooklyn quarterback was tackled and snowed under before he could even throw the ball. The officials had detected illegal holding of his potential receiver some 35 yards downfield.

Here we are well into another football season and we find (1) that none of the four major District teams has been defeated and, (2) not one touchdown has been scored by their composite opposition.

Furthermore, the only three points yielded by these local elevens in their combined total of seven games were the two Temple made by safety on Georgetown.

Meanwhile the quartet has ripped enemy defenses for an aggregate of 142 points by every possible method of scoring. Offensively Catholic University, on the record at least, is the most powerful of the four. The Cards scored 12 points against South Carolina and added 34 against Elon.

Georgetown, preying on weaker Roanoke after happily saying goodby to Temple's behemoths, ran up four touchdowns and tacked on two successful conversions.

All good things must come to an end, they say, and it is quite possible that the perfect records of all four District elevens will be no more come late Saturday afternoon. For, breathers behind them, they all bump into formidable opposition, and only C. U. will have the advantage of a home field.

That advantage probably will be needed when Dutch Bergman sends his Cards to meet Detroit University's Terrible Titans, who last year smeared an even more imposing C. U. record by the not-too-close count of four touchdowns to none.

Georgetown, perhaps, will meet the strongest opposition, playing Syracuse in the New Yorkers' lair. But Maryland's task can't be much easier, for the Terps come to grips with Virginia at Charlottesville. And, as one who watched the Cavaliers come might close to beating a good Navy team, this department will say that a Maryland victory over Virginia would be no mean feat.

George Washington, still not as well-co-ordinated as it should be at this stage of the season, due to the presence of comparative greenhorns at several vital positions, is hoping Butler will be as traditionally courteous as the household employe when they trek out to Indianapolis for an intersectional test.

Merchant Gridders Beat Northerns, 13-0

The S. E. Merchants unlimited football team defeated the Takoma Northerns, 13 to 0. Pemberton scored the first touchdown on a lateral from Quarterback DeCola and Vince Connelly scored the second on a pass from Fullback Roland. All scores came in the third period.

deadly block of the last Dodger in his zigzagging path.

Farkas picked up a second touchdown during the course of the most powerful offense the Redskins ever have shown at home, but that was virtually unnoticed in the other spectacular scoring plays.

German Stars

There was, for instance, the 50-yard punt return by German, the Redskins' great-looking freshman halfback from Center College, which paved the way for the second local score, and Todd's 19-yard-run for the last Redskin score. German, taking a long Parker punt sped all the way to Brooklyn's 25, leaving Dodger after Dodger strewn in his wake.

From there the Redskins went into the air, with German throwing to Justice to make it 14-0. The first touchdown had come about two minutes after the opening kickoff, when Filchock dove over from the 5 after a 43-yard march.

Farkas' tallying of the third touchdown has been related. The fourth fell also to his churning legs. His plunge through the line from the 2 culminated the Skins' longest sustained drive of the afternoon—60 yards.

Torrance (Bo) Russell, Auburn's 218-pound tackle contribution to Washington's football favorites, accounted for the fifth by blocking Ralph Kercheval's attempted punt from behind the Brooklyn goal line and at the same time grabbing and flopping on the ball for the score.

Russell then banged over his third place-kick for extra point, pulling one ahead of Masterson in this department. Masterson converted after the first and third touchdowns. The only missed Redskin point try was Wee Willie Wilkin's.

Returning to Parker to pay him a brief and final praise, his most electrifying completions were by basketball passes on which he jumped high into the air and while off the ground rifled his shots to end Perry Schwartz, who played a marvelous game for a lost cause. Four times Parker attempted this, one of the most difficult passes, and three times he succeeded. The exception was a heave dropped by Roland Young after he apparently had caught the ball.

Long-Suffering Fans Boo Reds' Tenth-Inning Crackup

Schnozzola Ably Aided By Myers, Goodman; Big Catcher Seen as Vaudeville Timber

By Henry McLemore

Cincinnati, Oct. 8 (U.P.).—Cracking under the strain of carrying the New York Yankees into extra innings, the Cincinnati Reds parted company with reason in the tenth inning today, and the finish of the World Series saw them playing like fugitives from the show, Hellzapoppin'.

With the score tied at 4-4, the Reds put on an exhibition that belonged on the vaudeville stage, not on a baseball diamond.

The only sour note in this touch of comic relief to a series that has been morbid (for the Reds) was that it wasn't funny to their fans. The long suffering customers, their patience exhausted at last, gave their heroes of a week ago a resounding mixture of booing, catcalls, and the cry of the Bronx bird in distress.

The number one comic in the tenth inning skit, which saw the Yankees get three runs on one hit, was that inimitable Italian, Ernie (Schnozzle) Lombardi, who missed his calling when he turned to baseball. Working without blackface, and with only such unfunny props as a mask, chest protector and shin guards, Signor Lombardi was a superb mixture of Olsen and Johnson, Eddie Cantor and Al Jolson.

His Leading Stooges

He was ably assisted by his two stooges, Billy Myers and Ival Goodman. Myers got the laughs under way, with Crosetti on base with a walk and one man down, he did a juggling act with Keller's grounder and allowed Crosetti to go to third and Keller to first.

If the band had known what was coming next it would have heralded the act with a roll of drums. DiMaggio hit a line single to right and Rightfielder Goodman, with a touch of the Fred Allen, reached down for the ball, gasped with surprise when he discovered he didn't have it, and then did an off-to-Buffalo shuffle after it as it rolled toward the bleachers.

As Goodman did his act, Lombardi stepped from the wings and prepared for his side-splitting finale at home plate. After Crosetti had scored the ball finally came in to Lombardi. So did Keller, all 200 pounds of him. There was a flurry of dust and Lombardi did a beautiful somersault to land upside down. The ball bounced out of his hand as he landed, and rolled some 5 feet away.

DiMaggio Keeps Going

While all of this was going on DiMaggio was racing around the bases. When DiMag rounded third the fans, his teammates, and everybody else began yelling at Lombardi to reach behind him and get the ball ready to tag DiMaggio.

But the signor paid no heed. There on the ground at home plate, with 32,794 customers looking on, Lombardi ran through his repertoire. He rolled and tossed, then made as if to get up, and then rolled down again. DiMaggio raced on toward the plate, with the ball resting comfortably within reach of the Cincinnati catcher.

Finally, sick and tired of laughing, Bucky Walters ran in and tried to get the ball in time to tag DiMaggio. But he was a little bit late as the Yankee outfielder slid across the plate.

The series ended shortly afterwards when the Reds, despite the fact that the first two men up singled, failed to score.

Final series tip: Don't fail to see Lombardi when he plays your neighborhood theater. Take the children, too. (advt.)

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Joe DiMaggio slides across the plate bearing the Yanks' seventh and last run of the World Series yesterday when they defeated Cincinnati for the fourth straight game, aided by four errors. Lombardi, Reds' catcher, is sprawled on the ground after diving to stop Werber's low throw to the plate on Dickey's grounder which was scored as an infield hit. The umpire is Babe Pinelli

Series Play-by-Play

Cincinnati, Oct. 8.—The play-by-play account of the fourth World Series game between the New York Yankees and Cincinnati Reds follows:

FIRST INNING

Yanks—On the third pitch Crosetti sent a short fly to Goodman in right. Rolfe took one called strike, then fouled to Lombardi in front of the Reds' dugout and the stands went wild. Myers came over near second base for Keller's fast grounder and threw him out in a snappy play, and again the customers roared as Derringer completed the inning and retired the Yanks on seven pitches. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—Werber grounded to Crosetti on the first pitch and was thrown out by a few steps. With the count two and two, Frey bounced to Gordon for an easy toss out at first. As each member of the Reds came to bat the stands gave him a hand. Selkirk ran in to short left for Goodman's fly and the Reds had also been retired on seven pitches. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

SECOND INNING

Yanks—DiMaggio filed to Goodman in right. McCormick made a beautiful gloved-hand stop of Dickey's smashing grounder and threw to Derringer, who covered first for the putout. On the first pitch Selkirk bounced to Frey and was thrown out. Derringer thus completed the second inning with only five pitches to the three Yankee batters. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—McCormick doubled off the wall in right center on the first pitch and the stands again went wild. The ball hit the wall near the 387-foot mark and McCormick easily beat Keller's throw-in to second. It was the Reds' first extra-base hit of the series. DiMaggio made a beautiful one-hand catch of Lombardi's fly near the wall in center. McCormick ran to third after the catch. Craft was called out on strikes as he watched a chest-high pitch go by. Berger grounded to Gordon, who threw him out, and Hildebrand had pitched his way out of a bad hole. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

THIRD INNING

Yanks—Gordon backed Berger almost to the wall in left for his long low fly. Dahlgren fanned on three pitches. Hildebrand was called out on strikes as he watched the third pitch nip the outside corner. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—Myers received a round of applause as he came to bat. Myers was called out on strikes watching a waste-high pitch pass him by. Derringer dumped the first pitch over short and into leftfield for a single. DiMaggio loped over near the centerfield exit gate and hauled down Werber's long fly. Frey was called out on strikes as a letter-high pitch nicked the inside corner. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

FOURTH INNING

Yanks—Myers made an easy catch of Crosetti's liner. McCormick came up with Rolfe's grounder and beat him to the bag for an unassisted putout. There was activity in the Yankee bull pen as Steve Sundra, young right-hander, began to warm up quickly. Keller lifted a high foul to Lombardi about 10 feet to the left of the plate. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—Sundra started to walk in from the bull pen, but Coach Earl Combs stopped him and set him back to continue his warming up. Hildebrand returned to the mound to pitch. Gordon took Goodman's hard grounder and threw him out. On a three-two pitch McCormick sent a hard bounder to Crosetti and was thrown out. Rolfe took Lombardi's grounder near third and threw him out by 30 feet. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

FIFTH INNING

Yanks—Al Simmons, a right-hand hitter and a veteran of several years with the American League before going to the National, was sent to play leftfield for the Reds and Berger moved over to center as Craft went to the bench. It was announced Craft had an upset stomach. Werber came far over for DiMaggio's grounder and tossed him out on a fine play. Frey threw out Dickey and Derringer had retired 14 straight batters on 34 pitches. Selkirk bounced a double off the screen in front of the rightfield bleaches for the Yankees' first hit off Derringer. Berger backed all the way to the fence in centerfield to haul in Gordon's long fly. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

Reds—Steve Sundra, young righthander, who won 11 straight games during the regular 1939 season, came in to pitch for the Yankees. Sundra came to the Yankees last year from their International League farm at Newark.

Simmons filed to Keller in short right. Berger sent a fast grounder to Rolfe, who threw him out on a nice play. It was announced Hildebrand had been withdrawn because he had a pain in his side. Myers smashed a liner into the rightfield corner and beat Keller's relay to third for a triple. Derringer fouled to Dickey in front of the Yankee dugout. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

SIXTH INNING

Yanks—Dahlgren popped to Frey on the grass back on first. Sundra walked on four straight balls. Goodman raced to the right field line for Crosetti's high fly, but dropped it. Sundra, who had started for second, thought Goodman would make the catch and turned back. When he realized that Goodman did not make the catch he turned again and tried to reach second, but it was too late and he was forced. Goodman to Myers, and Crosetti was safe on the force-out. Rolfe lined sharply to Frey. No runs, no hits, no errors, one left.

Reds—After belting one pitch out of the park barely foul, Werber sent a high pop-up to Dickey directly in front of the plate. Frey, for the second straight time, was called out on strikes as a high inside pitch nicked the corner. After fouling four pitches into the stands, Goodman sent a sharp bounder to Rolfe, who leaped high to pull down the bouncing ball and then threw to first for the putout. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

SEVENTH INNING

Yanks—With the count one and one, Keller sent a long fly that just cleared the screen in front of the rightfield bleachers for a home run and the first run of the ball game. DiMaggio backed Simmons almost to the wall in left for his long fly. Dickey watched one strike go by, then smashed a homer into the centerfield corner of the rightfield bleachers about 380 feet from the plate. Selkirk walked as a three-two pitch was low and inside. Milt Shoffner, veteran southpaw, began to warm up in the Reds' bull pen. Simmons ran into foul territory off the left field line and, with his back against the low wall of the temporary "jury box" stands, hauled in Gordon's high foul fly. Frey grabbed Dahlgren's bounder and threw to Myers at second, forcing Selkirk. Two runs, two hits, no errors, one left.

Reds—McCormick's hard bounder took a bad hop and hit Rolfe on the shoulder and bounced around the infield. It was charged as an error on Rolfe as McCormick was safe on first. Lombardi fanned, swinging at an inside pitch. Johnny Murphy, the Yankees' veteran relief pitcher, began warming up in the bullpen and Bucky Walters was doing the same in the Reds' pen. Simmons smashed a liner almost to the scoreboard in left-center and beat the relay to second for a double. McCormick was held on third. Berger bounced to Crosetti and was thrown out at first. McCormick scoring on the play. Simmons held second. Atley Donald, right-hander and product of the Yankees' farm at Newark, also began to warm up in the bullpen. Myers walked on a three-two pitch. Willard Hershberger, reserve catcher and right-hand batter, came in to bat for Derringer. Hershberger's Texas leaguer just missed DiMaggio's outstretched glove and fell safely for a single, scoring Simmons with the tying run and sending Myers to third. Werber lined a single to right, scoring Myers and sending the Reds in front. Hershberger went to second on the hit. The noise rocked the stands. Fordham Johnny Murphy, right-hander, replaced Sundra on the pitching mound for the Yankees. Frey fanned, swinging at a knee-high pitch. Three runs, three hits, one error, two left.

EIGHTH INNING

Yanks—Bucky Walters, right-hander, who lost the second game of the series to the Yankees, took over the Reds' pitching chores. Murphy popped to Frey on the dirt behind second. Crosetti filed to Berger in center. Myers raced back on the leftfield grass to pull in Rolfe's fly. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—Goodman dumped a liner into centerfield and beat the relay in to second base for a double. McCormick laid a sacrifice bunt down the first-base line and was thrown out. Murphy to Dahlgren. Goodman going to third. Lombardi slashed a ground single through short and into centerfield scoring Goodman and there was wild roaring in the stands once more. Murphy made a one-hand pickup of Simmons' bounder near the first-base line and threw to Crosetti, forcing Lombardi at second. Simmons was safe on the fielder's choice. Berger smashed a liner right back at Murphy. It bounced off Murphy's stomach but he recovered it in time to throw to first for the putout. One run, two hits, no errors, one left.

NINTH INNING

Yanks—Keller sliced a ground single over second and into center. DiMaggio slashed a single through short, sending Keller to third. Frey made a nice pickup of Dickey's bounder near second and threw to Myers in an attempt to force DiMaggio, but Myers dropped the ball for an error and Keller scored. DiMaggio was safe on second and Dickey on first. It was the Reds' first error of the series. Selkirk lined to Goodman deep in right, DiMaggio going to third after the catch. Gordon hit to Werber, who threw to the plate trying to catch DiMaggio, but the Yankee outfielder slid in under Lombardi and was safe with the tying run. It was scored as an infield single for Gordon, although Lombardi dropped Werber's low throw on the play. Dickey took second on the play. Dahlgren popped to McCormick near the pitcher's box. Murphy was called out on strikes as a knee-high curve broke across the outside corner. Two runs, three hits, one error, two left.

Reds—Myers was called out on three pitches. He didn't take the bat off his shoulder once. DiMaggio loped out near the wall in center and hauled in Walters' long fly. Dickey conferred with Murphy on the mound. Werber dumped a line single in leftfield. Frey lifted a high pop foul to Rolfe just off third. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

TENTH INNING

Yanks—Crosetti walked, the fourth ball coming in low and inside. Rolfe laid a sacrifice bunt down the first base line and was retired, McCormick unassisted, as Crosetti went to second. Myers fumbled Keller's bounder back of second for his second error of the game and Crosetti went to third and Keller was safe at first on the misplay. DiMaggio singled to right and the ball got away from Goodman for an error, Crosetti scoring on the single. Keller then headed for home and was safe with the run when Lombardi dropped the relay for a second error. Lombardi fell as Keller crossed the plate and the ball rolled a few feet from the plate. Nobody made a move to pick it up, so DiMaggio caught the enemy flat-footed by breaking for home and scoring safely as he slid in with the third run of as daffy a series of plays as World Series competition has ever seen. Dickey filed to Simmons in left. Berger backed against the wall in center for Selkirk's long fly. Three runs, one hit, three errors, none left.

Reds—Goodman dropped a single in center. McCormick's bounder bounced off Crosetti's outstretched glove for a single to left and Goodman went to second. Lombardi hoisted a high foul to Dickey just back of the plate and for the first time boos were heard from the stands. Keller ran into right center to take Simmons' fly. The runners held their bases. Berger lined to Crosetti, who fussed the ball momentarily but held onto it to end the ball game. No runs, two hits, no errors, two left.

Champs Within $168 Of Tying Last Year's Richest Division

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Oct. 8.—The $5,614.26 each of the New York Yankees won today as the winner's individual share of the World Series playing pool fell only $168.50 short of equaling the all-time high for players shares in a four-game series.

The record of $5,782.76 was set last year as the Yankees took four straight from the Chicago Cubs. Players share only in receipts of the first four games.

Each of the losing Cincinnati Reds received $4,282.58 compared to the four-game series record of $4,874.87 which each Cub received last year as "consolation" for the same kind of four straight drubbings the Reds took.

In 1938 there was no sale of radio rights such as that which added $60,000 to the players pool this series.

The all-time record winning player's share was $6,544.76, by the Detroit American League Club in 1935, when the series went six games.

The players pool this series was $440,117.84, the third highest in history. The largest pool was $460,002.66, in 1936, when the Yankees played the New York Giants six games.

the Yankees, the Reds, or the luck that curdled.

Paul Derringer, already out of his shower, went in the office and sat at the edge of McKechnie's chair. The boss spanked him affectionately and they talked for a moment.

Paul moved out into the main room and sat down at his locker.

The big fellow, as near a pitching machine as anything in the major leagues, said half to himself, half to Bill Werber, "You just can't make a mistake. I got Kelle twice on easy ones and then I made one mistake. I can't be a machine all the time."

McKechnie went the rounds, shaking hands with the boys who had brought Cincinnati its first National League pennant in two decades but couldn't bring down the greater prize.

"Be sure and stop in Wilkinsburg (Pa., his home), if you're goin' through," he told them. "And don't figure on just staying a minute, because you're staying overnight at least."

There were the same words for Billy Myers, who, so far as the fans were concerned, was the series goat for fumbling that double-play throw.

Finally, amid the heavy quiet, someone said, "We'll be back next year." And that summed it up.

Yankees Beat Reds In 10th, Win Series

day in the Reds' last ditch stand, and with George Selkirk's fifth inning double the only Yankee hit he had allowed as the game moved into the seventh, the folks in the stand were strong on the scent of a victory for the Reds.

Keller Hits Another

Then, at the start of the seventh, along came Keller. The Maryland boy, already the batting hero of this World Series and possessor of two World Series homers, punched a long fly over Goodman's head and it dropped into the right field seats for another homer.

One out later, Cincinnati fans who were still bearing with Derringer, were sickened. Bill Dickey hit a homer, a long line drive into the right center-field corner 370 feet distant, and the Yankees had a 2-0 lead.

Back in the second inning, the Reds had made scoring motions when Frank McCormick rapped a long double to the center-field wall, but Joe DiMaggio thrust himself between the Reds and the plate. He galloped back to the center-field wall to haul down Lombardi's long drive a mere foot from the barrier with a classic catch just before colliding with the fence, and Hildebrand tightened at that point by striking out Craft and forcing Berger to ground out.

3-Run Outburst

But in the seventh the Reds had an answer for the Yankees 2-run outburst, a 3-run reply that sent the grandstand folks into a wild demonstration as the Reds took over the lead. They got a break at the outset of the inning when McCormick's ground ball took a weird hop and struck Rolfe on the shoulder as he was set for the catch, although officially the ball was scored as an error.

McCormick languished on first base as Lombardi struck out, but Al Simmons, inserted into the game in the fourth inning when Centerfielder Craft complained of illness, fetched the 32,794 fans out of their despair. He did it by whacking a long drive double to the left-center wall that moved McCormick to third.

McCormick moved home when Berger grounded out to Crosetti for the second out, and then Sundra walked Myers, Manager McKechnie withdraw Derringer from the line-up in favor of Pinch-hitter Willie Hershberger and was instantly rewarded when Hershberger lofted a single to short left that scored Simmons with the tying run.

Murphy Takes Mound

Then Bill Werber emerged from the inning as a hero. He lashed a single into rightfield and scored Myers with the run that put the Reds in a 3-2 lead. Manager McCarthy tolerated Sundra no longer. Into the box went relief ace Johnny Murphy, who fanned Frey to end the inning.

McKechnie chose no less than Bucky Walters to protect that 3-2 lead, and when Walters disposed of the Yankees in one-two-three order in the eighth, and the Reds came up with another run on Goodman's double to center and Lombardi's single to center, the game appeared secure for the Reds.

Cincinnati fans were already to stage an uproarious scene with the end of the ninth inning. Bucky Walters was always a good bet to hold a two-run lead in the ninth. The Yanks would never lick the Reds in four straight, as they had licked the Cubs in '38. And then things began to happen.

DiMag Gets Single

The pesky Charley Keller rapped a hot single over second base to start the ninth. Then Joe DiMaggio rifled a single through shortstop to centerfield to move Keller to third. Up came bad Bill Dickey, who had broken up the first game with a ninth-inning hit. If Dickey would only hit a ground ball that could be turned into a double play, the Yankee threat would be quelled.

That's what Dickey did—hit a tame ground ball to Second Baseman Lonnie Frey. Frey flipped the ball to Shortstop Myers, and then—horrors! Myers fumbled Frey's throw in his eagerness to shoot it to first for a double play. DiMaggio was safe on second, Dickey was safe on first and Keller scored from third base.

Here Manager Joe McCarthy first called for a sacrifice from George Selkirk, and when Selkirk missed a first bunting attempt, McCarthy changed his strategy. He let Selkirk hit, and a long line drive to Goodman resulted, DiMaggio taking third after the catch.

Up came Joe Gordon. He dribbled a grounder down to Bill Werber. To the plate Werber shot the ball, a brilliant throw from out of position, as DiMaggio sped for home with the tying run. The play at the plate was close—until Lombardi dropped the ball to relieve Umpire Pinelli of a crucial decision. The score was tied at 4-4 and Gordon credited with a hit on the play.

Walters tightened at this point, forcing Dahlgren to pop up and Murphy to strike out, but Murphy moved easily through the under half of the ninth. Werber singled to left with two out, and Frey popped up. Into extra innings went the ball game.

Walters himself inspired the winning run in the tenth when he walked the weak-hitting Crosetti at the outset. Rolfe sacrificed Crosetti to second, and then the game went uproariously wild as the Reds folded to the dismay of the 32,794.

Makes Second Error

Charley Keller hit a ball to the hapless Myers, who fumbled for his second error, and Crosetti moved to third with Keller safe at first. Joe DiMaggio lofted a single to rightfield and set in motion another pair of Cincinnati misplays.

Goodman, attempting to field DiMaggio's hit on the first hop, muffed the ball, and Keller, who had stopped at third base, followed Crosetti across the plate. DiMaggio, racing to third on Goodman's muff, paused only briefly at that base, when he saw Lombardi make no move to retrieve the ball which lay in the dust only 6 feet from the plate, DiMaggio started for home. Suddenly aware that a run was about to score, Lombardi picked himself off the ground and grabbed the ball, lunging at the plate in an effort to tag DiMag, who blithely stepped over the catcher's outstretched hand and scored the third run of the inning.

That made it 7 to 4, Yankees, but a half-thrill still awaited Cincinnati fans. Goodman led off the tenth with a single to center and McCormick singled to left, but Lombardi popped up, Simmons flied out and Crosetti grabbed Berger's line drive to seal the unhappy fate of the Reds.

Upsets of 'Big Name' Teams Feature Week-End Grid Games

Minnesota, Northwestern Turned Back

Holy Cross, Fordham Also Defeated; Irish Have 'Close Call' With Georgia Tech

By Bill Boni,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

College football has gone through only two major week-end programs, yet already advance estimates of gridiron strength have had to be revised sharply, and mostly downward, in every section of the country.

A week ago it was the Southwest and Far West which were hit the hardest. Saturday the upset ax struck telling blows at Eastern and Midwestern teams which had been boomed as power houses in their own areas and likely contenders for high ranking nationally.

Holy Cross and Fordham, expected to march side-by-side to Eastern leadership, fell together. The Crusaders bowed to the extraordinary pass-catching and intercepting of Ken Kavanaugh. Louisiana State end, 26-7, and Fordham took a more decisive beating than the 7-6 score would indicate from Alabama's big line and fast-cutting backs.

Gophers, Wildcats upset

In the Midwest Northwestern and Minnesota dropped with the heaviest thuds. Oklahoma's sooners bottled up the platoons of Northwestern backs, including Bill De Correvont, and made good on breaks to topple the Wildcats, 23-0, and Nebraska, after pounding a porous Minnesota line, cut loose with a trick play to edge out the Gophers, 6-0.

But there were other results to add to the confusion. The South, already having accounted for two prime surprises with the defeats of Holy Cross and Fordham, sent up two of its smaller representatives, Centre and Virginia. The praying Colonels forced Army to come from behind and win, 9-6, on two blocked kicks, while Navy saved itself from a tie with the Cavaliers only by blocking two extra-point kicks. That made it 14-12 for the Midshipmen.

Carnegie Tech's 6-0 close call with Temple, which was stopped on the 7-yard line in the final quarter; the 19-7 victory of a reputedly weak Yale team over Columbia, and the power which Cornell let loose in spurts to beat Syracuse, 19-6, further jumbled the eastern setup.

Notre Dame in Trouble

The deep South nearly achieved another intersectional eye-popper when Georgia Tech's underrated Engineers stormed up from behind for a second touchdown against Notre Dame. But for the second week in a row the Irish won, 17-14, on a field goal, this one by Harry Stevenson. The Southwest did its best to make it a sorry day for the "Yankees" by sending Dana Bible's Texas Longhorns into Madison to whip Wisconsin, 17-7.

Three other battles about rounded out the line-up of bewildering results. Texas Christian, voted the best in the country last year, dropped its second game and first Southwest Conference start, by 14-13 to Arkansas, which had lost to Mississippi State a week ago, and Oregon State, the team that beat Stanford, had all it could do to hold off Idaho, 7-6.

Southern California, meanwhile, boosted its stock back into prominence. Disappointingly tied by Oregon in their opener, the Trojans really cut loose to bury Washington State, 27-0, with even sixth-stringers figuring in a last period scoring drive.

Of them all, the Northwestern and Holy Cross defeats were the most startling. Northwestern was reported gunning for the Big Ten title, and its long array of backs gained lots of yardage in midfield. But Ollie Hahnenstein made two bad fumbles which the Sooners converted into scores, and they got their other touchdown on a pass interception.

Giants Rally, Beat Pirates

period, on a plunge from the 1-foot line by Swede Johnson. Niccolai's conversion gave them an unexpected 7-0 advantage at half time.

Playing sharper football under their new coach, who succeeded Johnny Blood, the Pirates outgained the Giants but could not match the aerial wizardry of Danowski and Cuff. The Pirates totaled 14 first downs in 9, making 10 by rushing compared with two for New York.

Starting from their own 31, the Bucs marched straight across the goaline for their touchdown. The surprised champions tried hard to even things before the half ended, but the Buccaneers took the ball on downs on their 1-yard line.

The Giants struck quickly in the third period. On the third play Danowski tossed a pass to Cuff on the ten and Cuff crossed the goal line unmolested. Soon after, Dell Isola intercepted a Pirate pass on the Pittsburgh 21. Two Danowski passes and a line play carried to the 5, then Danowski shot a pass across the line to Cuff for the winning touchdown.

Selections at Laurel.

Dear Al:

With a steeplechase slipped into the day's business, an eight-race program will be on tap this afternoon. Col. E. R. Bradley's big stable is coming in from New York in two divisions. In the second division, due here tomorrow, will be Bimelech, winner of the Belmont Futurity and the outstanding two-year-old of the season. Bimelech isn't coming here for a vacation either, and we will get a chance to see this ace in action. Incidentally, the Millsdale Stable will ship Andy K. here. Jockey Wayne Wright has changed his plans. He had said he would come to Laurel but has changed his mind and will ride out the Jamaica meeting before transferring to the Free State. Jockey F. A. Smith, who does most of the riding for the Bradley string, joins the local saddle colony this week. From New York comes word that Jockey Basil James will do the piloting for the C. V. Whitney Stable next year. This probably means that Whitney has some real juveniles for next season. What's the story on Apprentice J. Mattison winning with horses that Johnny Gilbert couldn't get to the winner's circle? The favorite players took a beating Saturday when the usually reliable Tall Trees Stable handed them a lemon in the entry of Bill Farnsworth and Early Morn. The form reversals at this meeting have been amazing. Take Versailles for instance. How was that for a form flip-flop? The fans are calling Laurel "Silent Acres" now that the track refuses to give the customers a public address system. Trainer Guy Bedwell continues on his merry way. With horses like Sun Egret and Victory Morn in his string, Bedwell is parading through the stake ranks this fall. He may find it tougher from now on, however, for there are real horses coming in from New York now that Belmont has closed. Here's the winners. BILL.

First race—Chatted received troublesome interference when beaten by Colosseum last week but finished gamely to earn third position. Meets slightly cheaper company here; should win. Winter Sea has speed but is slow to get away at the start. Ponemah gets a good figure.

Second race—Autumnquest makes her initial outing over the obstacles. She was a speedy filly on the flat and if she stands should take the measure of these maidens. Scurry Along, an invader from Fair Hill, is reported to be at home over the Laurel course. Phillip's Pete was fair in trials on the flat; may prove dangerous.

Third race—Gallahadion competes against a mediocre field in this heat after racing creditably behind some of the best colts in New York. Rawson has early speed but is inclined to toss up the sponge when challenged. True Call won in New York last month and gets the call over the others.

Fourth race—Dinner Date has been unable to place this year running in handicaps in New York. However, the contention provided in this event looks like a setup for the Milky Way filly. Charlotte Girl won at Havre wearing a claiming tag and should give a fair account of herself. Phara Belle for show.

Fifth race—Healfly appears well placed in the feature event after droping a length and a half decision to the speedy Speed to Spare at Belmont. Savage Beauty, indicating tip-top form by several sparkling performances at Havre and New York, will be the one to beat. Rex Flag to take care of the others.

Sixth race—Big Hurry, winner of the Selima Stakes over this strip last fall, has received sufficient conditioning in New York races to have her on edge to take down the winner's share in the supporting feature. Exploded scored at the expense of high-grade platers in New York but meets a horse of a different caliber today. Up the Creek for show.

Seventh race — Cornwallis has shown steady improvement since racing on the milers and has the speed to take the top and hold his field at bay at this route. Golden Vein, the class of the race, was sore in his recent outing and failed to extend himself. He is always a dangerous contender. Braving Danger could threaten if fit.

Eighth race—Sneaky Henry and Time Beater, coupled in the betting as an entry, should appear an unbeatable team in the nightcap. Both horses held their own against better company in New York. Howard is finally in form as shown by his recent winning effort. Lauerman drops down but late races have been poor.

Best bet—Big Hurry.

Chisox Prolong City Series; Win by 8-5

Passeau and Lee Pounded as Victor Overcomes 5-Run Lead

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 8.—The Chicago White Sox spotted the Cubs five runs and then defeated the National League leaders today, 8 to 5, in ten innings to prolong their city championship series for at least one more game.

The Cubs now have won three games and the White Sox two.

A crowd of 17,227 saw the Cubs take what appeared to be a comfortable five-run lead in the first five innings, but the Sox came on fast late in the game to knock starting Pitcher Claude Passeau out of the box and hammer Big Bill Lee for the winning runs.

Steel Orders Push Plants to Near Capacity

Operations in Week Climb to 87½%, 25½ Points in Month

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Oct. 8.—Humming at boom-time tempo, the nation's steel industry is headed toward a 90 per cent production rate to meet urgent demands, says the magazine Steel. "In only a few cases are producers of the commoner steel products able to take additional business for shipment by December 31" the magazine reports.

"Some consumers are seeking places on first quarter schedules, but mills are accepting such business at open prices, and only a relatively small tonnage has been taken on this basis."

A moderation is noted in fourth quarter requirements, but increased consumption "is reflected in pressure for delivery and in heavier demands on warehouses by users unable to obtain sufficiently prompt shipment from mills."

The industry's operations climbed 3½ points to 87½ per cent last week, the highest since May, 1937 —representing an upturn of 25½ points over a month ago.

31 Blast Furnaces Blown In

During September, 31 blast furnaces were lighted, the largest number placed in operation in any one month since September, 1929. Pig iron production last month averaged 95, 757 tons daily, says Steel, up 11.6 per cent from August and a gain of more than 30 per cent above a year ago.

"Since many furnaces went in the latter part of the month, a more substantial upturn in production is seen for October," the magazine observes.

Steel's scrap composite is up $1.41 to $22.16, highest in 15 years, although scrap prices "have given some indication of leveling off." Tin plate operations gained 7 points to 90 per cent last week, spurred by both foreign and domestic demands.

"Export business in other steel products continues limited despite active inquiry from neutral countries," adds Steel. "A number of foreign buyers are seeking pig iron here, with prices reported in excess of the domestic market."

Steelworks operations at Pittsburgh gained 4 points to 83 per cent, Youngstown 4 to 90, with another 4-point gain in prospect this week; Chicago 2 to 82, Detroit 1 to 100, Eastern Pennsylvania 3 to 84, Wheeling 5 to 93, Buffalo 11½ to 83¼, Cleveland 1¼ to 89, Cincinnati 5½ to 84. New England was unchanged at 100 per cent, St. Louis at 72 and Birmingham at 96.

Insurance Stocks Advance in Week

New York, Oct. 8.—Insurance stocks in the New York City market advanced sharply during the past week, according to records compiled by Hoit, Rose & Troster, specialists in bank and insurance stocks. The aggregate market value of 20 leading fire and casualty insurance issues on October 6 was $907,656,000, compared with $858,671,000 at the close of the previous week, an increase of $17,885,000, or 2.03 per cent.

New York City bank stocks declined during the past week. The aggregate market value of 16 leading issues on Friday, October 6 was $1,580,909,000, compared with $1,615,428,000 at the close of the previous week, a decrease of $34,520,0000, or 2.14 per cent.

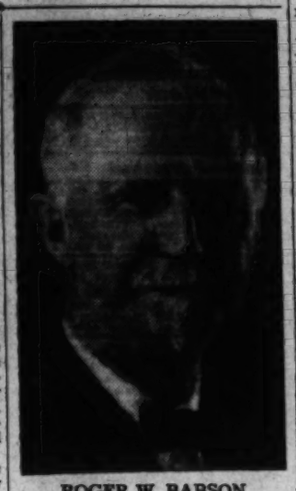
Japan Is Strong in Warfare, Weak in Diplomacy, Babson Says

While Japanese Are Fighting Communism, He Writes, They Are Driving 100 Million Chinese Into Practical Socialism

By Roger W. Babson

Shanghai, China, Oct. 8.—I do not blame the Japanese for wanting to develop China. Their mistake is in the method they are using. The Japanese are strong on military strategy, but they are weak on diplomatic psychology. They fail to realize that the world is ruled by feelings —rather than by figures. Perhaps the blame for the present unfortunate situation belongs to the Americans and English for not taking a hand when Secretary Stimson urged such action ten years ago. That, however, is now water over the dam.

No event in history compares with the great evacuation and migration of the people of Northeastern China during the past two years. Think of it! From 30,000,000 to 50,000,000 people have deserted their homes, packed their few clothes and heirlooms in push carts and moved from 500 to 1,500 miles inland. The few rich went by planes; the middle-class crowded boats and buses; but 80 per cent of them walked! And this migration is still going on as I write.



ROGER W. BABSON

Scourging a Nation

As these people leave, they destroy what they cannot move. After taking out all the machinery in a factory, they burn the factory. After moving this machinery on a railroad, they blow up the bridge. While here I met a man who saw Chinese coolies who had been carrying railroad rails on their shoulders for over 100 miles into the interior. These acts of courage and perseverance are what have astonished the Japanese.

What interests me most is where these Chinese settle. They not only get away from a navigable river, but they avoid a prairie country. They select a spot by a small rapid stream of pure water within a mile or two of rugged hills where fertile land lies between the hills and the river. They use the river for their water supply; they till the meadow for their food, and they dig caves in the hillside for their homes, shops and little factories.

"World of Tomorrow"

If bombing planes are to determine the course of nations, then the Chinese are now blazing the trail for the "World of Tomorrow." Furthermore, while the Japanese are fighting communism, they are driving 100,000,000 Chinese to the most effective socialistic living witnessed since the time of the early Christians. My few days in China convince me that, unless world peace is soon assured, large cities are now at their maximum size. Decentralization is ahead everywhere.

What will be the outcome of the present conflict? It will be a Japanese military victory. Furthermore, when one hears here on the ground both sides of the story, he begins to realize that the Japanese also have an argument. It is true that they have done heartless things and murdered thousands of innocent women and children, but such is modern warfare. The Japanese now have the large eastern Chinese cities and they will hold them for some years. Their armies have already penetrated China as far as they wish.

Will China Be Split in Two?

The undecided question is (1) whether China will be split into two nations—Northeastern China, controlled by Japanese through puppet rulers, and the rest of China under Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, or (2) whether Chiang will be captured or overthrown so that all China will, for a time, become under Japanese dimination. In either case, China will never be at peace again until the Japanese are absorbed. Everyone here feels that to reverse the centuries-old process of China's absorbing her conquerors is too big a job for even the Japanese to solve.

Certainly, Japan has a wonderful opportunity here. Her future, however, depends upon how she treats the Chinese people. Japan should not forget that China—thanks to American missionaries—is passing through a great spiritual revival. War lords whose families have for generations fought one another are now joining forces. China is learning much from this rebirth of patriotism. If Japan is wise enough to capitalize on this change, historians may some day write that this war marked a milestone in the development of both China and Japan. If, however, Japan fails psychologically, all her military strength will have been for naught.

The Japanese have established a strict censorship of all business as a result of new regulations. The banks are doing very little business, and, of course, most of the rich Chinese have fled to the interior or to foreign ports. Japanese came aboard our ship when we landed here. Their doctors looked at our tongues and their officials looked at our baggage. This interference with commerce and business and these dictatorial practices will surely last throughout the war—and probably throughout Japan's so-called Five Year Plan of Rehabilitation. So it looks like the "open door" is closed to Occidentals—at least for many years to come.

I am very fond of the Japanese as a people. I have had one in my home for 15 years. He has been faithful and kindly. Some of my books have been translated into Japanese and I have other contacts. I can sympathize with them for being provoked at China. The Japanese are a wonderful race. If they are now fair with China and the rest of the world, the Chinese "incident"—as they call it—may eventually help both nations. Let us hope that Japan will not make the same mistake in settling with China that the Allies made in settling with Germany in 1919. Japan will be victorious in the end only by being just and generous now.

Montreal to Be Host To 800 Hotel Men

Montreal, Oct. 8.—More than 800 hotel men from all parts of the United States are expected to attend the American Hotel Association convention to be held here from October 9 to October 14. Two special trains, one from Chicago and one from New York, will carry them here.

Railway stations will be decorated in their honor and a band of Scottish pipers will greet each separate group upon arrival.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The other evening a very sociable rubber bridge game almost ended in a battle royal," writes G. S. B. The trouble occurred because of a misinterpretation of the revoke rule. He continues, explaining the situation: "South was the declarer, and on the eleventh trick led a diamond from the dummy, East following suit. Declarer trumped with the deuce of hearts in his own hand. West overtrumped with a jack of hearts and promptly played back a diamond.

"West claimed no revoke on the twelfth trick and would not concede the contract to South the declarer. Hearts were trumps and declarer would have made the contract if West had followed suit on the diamond. West claims South was down one trick."

Casper Milquetoast wished fervently that there was some way he could revoke his partner's bidding on today's hand. His partner kept bidding and the opponents commenced doubling.

Here is the way H. T. Webster, a cartoonist, describes it:

"On a recent salmon fishing trip on the Miramichi, this bridge hand helped reconcile us to the dearth of salmon. The cast of characters follows: North, Casper Milquetoast; East, Enders Vorhees; South, Robert Sealy, and West, Dr. D. A. Shambaugh.

"When the bidding reached five spades doubled, Mr. Milquetoast aged perceptibly. At six spades double his hair turned snow white, but on the redouble his symptoms really went to town.

"The opening lead, plus the finesse of the diamond king, made the contract a simple matter and, as North and South were vulnerable, a comparatively rich man of Mr. Milquetoast."

Chapter 16

IT FAWNINGLY did its best, his mind, to close his eyes to reality; but during the years when he had been shut out of trying to get anything for himself, it had taken on something, only a very little of course, of the unhuman trait of disinterestedness. And now it could not instantly go back to the whole duty of minds—to help their masters think whatever suits the emotion of the hour, to find plausible reasons for taking whatever the hand itches to hold. Most of it subserviently bade him believe that a country school-ma'am was a perfect mate for him, since he was no more than a country school-teacher. But that part of his mind which was still colored by twenty years of semi-honest impersonal thinking, told him disagreeably not to be such a fool as to belittle the dreadful reality of different tastes in table-manners, speech, and books; reminded him that Susan said "ey-ah" for yes, that he had overheard her telling Peter Dryden that she too loved the poems of Robert Service, that she held her fork as she had been taught, not as he had been taught.

His heart shouted down one doubt after another, cried indignantly, "What difference do such trifles make? None! None!" And presently, as the days went by, such uncertainties were swallowed up by a greater one, the aching uncertainty, not as to what Susan was, but as to what she felt about his age. Did he seem old to her? He meant by this too old for love. Whenever he thought of the difference in their ages he swore by all that he held most sacred (another name for what in cooler moments he called decent good breeding), that he would hold his hand from passing off his small local prestige on her inexperience as anything of value, that he would in no way take advantage of her youth, her needs, her ignorance, to hurry or press or confuse her, that he would make up for his years by a delicacy of thought for her happiness rather than his own, such as could be felt by no egotistic young man—and hung his head to think how many men of his age had proffered this same faltering apology for gray hairs.

But this was carrying humility too far. His hair was not gray. He was no ancient. Shut up between the raw youth of the Academy students and Aunt Lavinia's dolorous old age he had lost his sense of proportion as to age. Forty-four is not old. But he had somehow become forty-five. Well, that is not old. Not even physically. Not a single long-legged Senior had yet come along who could beat him in tennis, nor one of the raw younger teachers, boiling with vitality as they were. This smark-aleck young Bowen, for all his college coaching, could not take a set from him. And nobody in Windward County could outskate him, except in mere brute speed, which he did not value. (Leaning forward at his desk he jotted down a memorandum to start a little earlier than usual this year to flood for winter skating the two tennis courts in front of the Academy.)

But his mind, anxiously marking which thoughts pleased him most, noted that there was an alloy of uneasiness in the satisfaction he took in excelling at sports—perhaps because they were so closely associated with bodily youth; while he drew an unmixed pleasure from the fact that he could do much more for Susan than a younger man. Here was a theme on which many variations could be played—there was the security he could give her, more than she had ever known; the widened horizons of travel and comfort and intellectual growth he could open to her; the struggle with poverty, with competition, he could spare her; the experienced protection he could throw around her, who had none at all now. He yearned over the defenseless young pilgrim trudging on towards where the world, like Apollyon, darkly straddled over all the way. With him she would be safe. He would see to it that she had her full share of satisfactions and pleasures—not the meager half-portion which was all she would have without him.

HE NEED not even wait to begin helping her get what she wanted. What concerned her most now was her little sister's education. He knew that her heart failed her at the prospect of struggling for this alone, unaided, unknown to anyone in the university world. She quaked at the idea that she might never be able to give Delia the long years of study and intellectual discipline needed by that vigorous brain, no matter how passionately she saved and starved and denied herself the brightnesses of young life. Here was something he could do for her, and in his own field. He took from the shelves the lore acquired in 20 years of experience. It gave him something to say every time he saw her, when she came lilting down his stairs, or when on the street he knew by the gush of warmth in his heart that it was she who came toward him over the marble flagstones with her flowing step. He always had words ready to bring her to a halt beside him, her gray eyes fixed on him. (How could people say that any eyes but gray eyes were beautiful.) It was, "Oh, Susan, I've just thought of a scholarship in Wellesley that we might land for Delia." Or, "Susan, it's just occurred to me that Delia has almost enough credits to apply for a scholarship at Swarthmore. Nobody would be better off than under Quaker influence." Or, "Do you know, it might be a good thing for Delia to go to some big State university in the Middle West. I detest crowds, you've heard me say that a thousand times. But Delia is so vital, a crowd might be stimulating for her." They put their heads together in long conferences over her credits, and evolved the possibility that she might graduate from her high school in three years instead of four. "She'd lack only three subjects to meet college entrance requirements, and bright as she is she could easily get those up this coming summer: I'd coach her in all three, gladly. No, not at all. No thanks needed. It would be a pleasure for me to teach anybody with such a brain as hers."

And while they were thus discussing what whould be best for Delia, he would be gazing at Delia's sister until he had added a new detail to the picture hung in his memory—the line of the jaw perhaps, long but exquisitely clean-cut, or the subtle, rather strange modeling of the delicate cheek-bone, too high and yet, to his eye, with the classic quality of inevitability. The word made him laugh at the difference between the traditional Greek head of marble with its foreordained proportions and static passivity of expression, and this irregular, unexpected, gleaming-bright face of living youth.

For Susan's face was in these days constantly bright. Talking with Mr. Hulme had showed her that she had not known enough of the academic world with its intricacies of credits and personal influence and scholarship committees, even to realize the difficulty of helping Delia get to college. "Why, I wouldn't have known where to begin without you, Professor Hulme. It's wonderful to have you help us this way." She said this a good many times. He usually countered with some remark about Delia's fine mind. But he did not always hear what Susan said. He had strange absences from their talk, moments when the rigidity of self-control to which he had schooled himself till he had thought it was his nature, broke down at a look from her, at a certain turn of her head, at a certain folding of her lips, into the startling splendor of an emotion transcending and overwhelming the will. It terrified him to feel himself out of hand.

AND YET why not? Was he not leaving behind him the old need for privation and denial which has so long kept him wandering in the dark and cold? He had not known how bleak his solitude was, till looking into the future he saw the years with lighted windows glowing warm, beckoning him in from the cold darkness.

He had other moments of laughable panic, when he told himself, "But this is going too fast. I will soon be out of control. I must put the brakes on." And then remembered with excitement, with panic, with exultant joy, that he was entering the spacious, beautiful, dangerous world of the heart where the brakes and cautions and tight little moderations of the mind have no place. He must begin, he told himself—he did begin—to practice less stiffly that trusting faith in a new element which he constantly preached as an athletic coach. In teaching swimming and skating, he was always between exasperation and pity to see how long it takes timid beginners to learn that the new element in which they move gives them a new freedom rather than a new danger, how hard it is for them to stop the cramped to-and-fro pacings to which they are confined by the prison-cell of ordinary life. "Now just put your mind on the fact," he often cried impatiently, "that skating frees you from the stump-stump-stump falling from one foot to the other of walking. It's speed that keeps you up in skating. Put your faith in speed—and let yourself go." And to beginning swimmers, "You don't need to be on your guard every minute against the law of gravity, as you do when you have only thin air around you. Air's no good to lean on. It always lets you down. But water wants to keep you from falling down. Only you must have faith in it. Let your whole weight on it—and let yourself go."

That was what he told beginners trembling in anxieties forced on them by the prosy laws of the world they had left behind. This was what he told himself, as he turned his back on the familiar world of the intellect, in which nothing moves save by the trivial forces of the mind and will. He began to let himself go—when he was with Susan—and was rewarded again and again by an intuition truer than thought telling him that the girl—his girl—made a response to him different in quality from what she could have made to any other. She might not know this. She was so young, so utterly without experience. But he knew it. Such intuitions could not lie to you as mere thoughts did. There was something reaching out to him from her, something beginning to live.

If it were living, it needed time to make roots. Everything living does. Well, here was something else he could do for her which would never occur to the greedy impatience of a young man. He could give her time. He could avoid sinning against immaturity. He would know better than to snatch a flower with the first soft swelling of its bud. He resolutely made his plans to give her time. As far as the familiar routine of their daily life made it natural and unforced, he swore to himself that he would from now on share his life with her, and let that sharing take them where it would. He would stand watchfully by his door, waiting for her first knock. When that came, light though it might be, he would open his door and let her come in. As far in as she would. When she would.

If she would.

"YOU MUST tell me," said Timothy Hulme to Susan, looking around the low-ceilinged room, "how it was when you lived here. That'll give me a notion of how to make it look as though I really belonged."

"But it does look as it used to. Only fresher. Grandfather never had money for paper and paint, and Delia and I—well, you know how it never occurs to children that things can be different from the way they always have been. The yellow paint on the walls is like sunshine."

Aunt Lavinia said, "They're like old-country houses. There's almost a Scotch look to them."

The other two paid the tribute of a moment's silence to this superlative of praise. Then, "Susan, was it your grandfather who built them?"

"No, no. It was his grandfather. My great-great. The nine stone houses and the academy building. That was all he ever did."

"Well, that was enough. I'd be proud to leave behind me a few shelters for human lives that couldn't be blown down or burned up or shaken to pieces or carried away by flood."

"It's hard to make any changes in them," said Susan thoughtfully. "When you feel like having more windows or another door . . ."

"What do you do?" asked Aunt Lavinia.

"You do without," said the girl, with a smile.

"But you're safe—as you never can be in one of the flimsy wooden houses. You know you have something to rely on," Timothy Hulme reminded her.

"Oh, yes, you're safe," admitted the girl, without enthusiasm.

She glanced down at the sticks of white birch glowing on the hearth before her, looked again and cried, "Why, those are our andirons! But they were sold at the auction!"

"I just happened to pick them up," explained the owner of the house casually. "The fireplace is so wide. I needed something solid to hold the big sticks."

"But . . ." began Susan, and said no more, looking up at the old mirror and around at the chairs and tables in the room.

"Do ye know what I'd like?" said Aunt Lavinia, from the armchair where she had been half dozing. "I'd like my tea. But I suppose ye have na' tea things up here yet, Tim?"

"Would I be asking Lavinia Coulton to any place that hadna' tea things?" said Timothy. "Susan, come along, will you, and help me get the tea? It'll be the first meal here."

In the kitchen, bright with apple-green paint, linoleum and green-and-white checked sash-curtains, Susan stepped around, saying, "How nice these little crackers look. Shall I put some cream on the tray, too, or do we all take lemon? What a cheerful color green is! Yes, it's really boiling." She made no comment on the old dishes, on the table made out of one enormous oak plank, or—after one long look—on the 1 adderback chairs set against the wainscoted walls.

War Damaging Cruise Trade of Virgin Islands

St. Thomas Loses Place on Itinerary Of Tourist Vessels

By Alfred Friendly

By some 9,000 American citizens who inhabit St. Thomas, in the Virgin Islands, the effects of European hostilities are as severely felt as if America were at war. The problem is among the most critical of the Interior Department, Division of Territories and Island Possessions.

Citizens of St. Thomas, as distinct from some of the other agricultural Virgin Islands, live almost exclusively from work at the harbor, and the tourist trade in handicrafts.

The islanders had looked forward to a busy winter, for 31 cruise boats had scheduled stops there, and many freighters were expected to stop for refueling and supplies. With the outbreak of war, 19 of the 31 cruises were canceled, since the ships were those of the belligerent nations. Few of the rest are expected, because the other ships are those of neutral European nations which may be loath to sail the high seas on pleasure jaunts.

One of the ships scheduled to stop three times at St. Thomas was the Athenia.

Not one American flag vessel has scheduled a cruise stop at the Virgin Islands for this winter, a matter which the Islands' governor, Lawrence W. Cramer, has brought to the attention of the Maritime Commission's chairman, Admiral Emory S. Land.

Although every attempt is being made to find markets for the island's handicrafts in the United States, the bulk of the sales always has been made to cruise tourists. Some 25 stores on the mainland carry Virgin Island hand-made goods, but their sales totaled only $3,500 last year, whereas the sales made on the docks totaled more than $40,000.

First effects of the dismissal order in the PWA and WPA are shown in the July Government employment figures for August. They reveal that the Federal Works Agency lost 3,755 employes, 196 of whom worked here.

Despite these terminations, total Government employment continued its steady rise, setting record after record. The August total was 932,953, of whom 124,610 were in Washington, where employment rose during the month by 595. These latter were largely in the Census Bureau and among employes of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, working on Gravelly Point Airport.

Washington has turned into a literary factory in the several last weeks. Besides two books by Washington newspaper correspondents, Frederick William Wile and Kenneth Crawford, a number of Government employes have seen their works recently come rolling off presses other than those at the GPO.

William Clayton Pryor, chief of the WPA photographic section, has just brought out a book, in collaboration with Mrs. Pryor, called "Let's Go to the Movies." Just off the press is "Washington—Nation's Nerve Center," a picture book by Edwin Roskam, of the Farm Security Administration photographic staff. Another new picture book is "American Exodus," a pictorial counterpart of "Grapes of Wrath," photographer is Dorothea Lange, also of FSA, with the text by her husband, Paul Taylor, former FERA and WPA executive, now teaching at the University of California.

A fourth new volume is by James L. McCamy, assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture. It deals with the controversial subject of Government publicity. To be released within a week is a timely volume on the famous Creel Committee, by James Mock, of the National Archives, and Cedric Larson, of the War Department. The title is "Words that Won the War."

Six Who Crossed Pacific in Junk To Sail to Europe

Quatsino, B. C., Oct. 8 (Canadian Press).—Undiscouraged by a six-months battle with the Pacific, Capt. John Anderson, former officer of a transpacific liner, laid plans today to sail his small Chinese junk to Europe.

While Capt. Anderson awaited a tow to Seattle for his storm-battered 50-foot craft, the Tai Ping, which weathered the typhoon-swept Pacific, a pirate attack and starvation, he disclosed that his wife, four Norwegian crew members and himself would sail south to San Francisco, through the Panama Canal to New York and thence to Norway and Finland—war permitting.

It was the third day ashore for the adventurous sea-going six who left Shanghai April 7. All six showed the strain of their voyage which came near disaster when their food supply dwindled to a bowl of rice a day per person.

Chrysler Accuses C. I. O. Workers of Slow-Down Strike

Detroit, Oct. 8 (AP).—Chrysler Corporation accused the C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers today of carrying on a "new form" of sit-down strike.

Herman L. Wexler, vice president in charge of Chrysler operations, said that to force concessions in pending negotiations for a new contract workers had engaged in a "production strike," deliberately slowing down production.

Union leaders denied the charge, saying production schedules on new model cars had been too heavy for the men to handle.

Fred S. Cresswell, engineer for the Public Works Administration here, has resigned to accept a post as promotion engineer for the Clay Sewer Pipe Association, it was announced yesterday.

Mrs. Jane Latimer Quits Politics in Montgomery

Takoma Park Woman Long Active Among Maryland Democrats

MRS. JANE LATIMER

Mrs. Jane Latimer, 208 Hodges lane, Takoma Park, Md., with the Montgomery County Democratic organization 16 years, has resigned from all activities connected with politics.

Until a few days ago, Mrs. Latimer was secretary to the Ways and Means Committee of Maryland, an appointment she received from the Baltimore delegation to the legislature. She held this office under Former Gov. Nice and Governor O'Conor.

Having been reinstated at the Navy Department under Civil Service, Mrs. Latimer, prominent among women's Democratic clubs in the State, told the Post last night that in accepting the position she promised she would have no active part in politics.

"I could not be a member of an organization and not be active," she said.

When the Democratic organization in Montgomery County opposed her running against Miss Ruth Shoemaker for the House of Delegates, and also on the State Central Committee, Mrs. Latimer then joined Independent forces and supported Gov. O'Conor.

For 10 years she served on the executive board of the United Women's Democratic Clubs of Maryland and was president of the Women's Democratic Club of Montgomery County two years.

She was president of the Takoma Park Women's Democratic Club five years, having been elected two years after it was organized by the late Mrs. J. Bond Smith. Her most recent place was on the executive board of the county club. She also was instrumental in forming the Silver Spring and other clubs. She is Congressional district director for the sixth district in the League of Women Voters of Maryland.

She is the wife of Charles Y. Latimer, former clerk to the Montgomery County Commissioners.

200-Year-Old Stratford Mill, Rebuilt, to Be Dedicated

Structure Put Up by Richard Lee in 1740 Equipped With Machinery From Maryland Installation; Ceremony to Be October 29

A 200-year-old grist mill on the Lee estate at Stratford, Va., has been restored by the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation and will be dedicated formally October 19 before a distinguished assemblage, including the Virginia-born Viscountess Astor, of England; it was announced yesterday by the foundation.

The old mill, dating back to 1740, was built by Richard Lee, ancestor of the Virginia Lees, and is on the Potomac River at a point where it touches the historic estate. Restoration of the mill was made possible through combined contributions of Senator and Mrs. Jesse H. Metcalf, of Providence, R. I., and James F. Pell, president of General Mills, Minneapolis.

When Bell became interested in the suggested restoration of the relic, he commissioned Prof. B. W. Dedrick, consulting engineer at Pennsylvania State College, to do research on old mills and their machinery, and install proper equipment. The research consumed a year, carrying the investigators into remote places of Virginia and surrounding States, before a set of machinery 200 years old—suitable for the Stratford mill—could be located.

This machinery was found at Linesboro, Md., and has been installed in the mill. Reconstruction plans for the building were drawn by Fiske Kimball, internationally known architect, and the work was supervised by Gen. B. F. Cheatham, resident superintendent of Stratford Hall, the Colonial estate.

Members of the Robert E. Lee Foundation Board, representing nearly ever State in the Nation, will assemble at Stratford Thursday and remain in session throught the nineteenth. The estate, not distant from Fredericksburg, has been completely restored by the foundation. The mansion, in which Light Horse Harry Lee, Revolutionary hero, Robert Edward Lee, Confederate leader, and others of the clan resided, has been completely rebuilt, as have the extensive box gardens, carriage houses and stables.

The movement to restore Stratford Hall assumed Nation-wide interest more than a decade ago when the foundation, organized to rescue the historic house and premises from decay, launched its appeal. With the elaborate restoration, architectural authorities have said the house and grounds are very much as the Lees knew them.

Washingtonians who have been interested in the foundation efforts and are expected to attend the mill dedication are Mrs. Joshua Green, Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Hawes, Mr. and Mrs. Cazenove Lee and Mrs. Horace Van Deventer.

Self-Possessed Dalai Lama, 6, Blesses Followers

Lhasa, Tibet, China, Oct. 8.—The 6-year-old boy who was recently discovered in a village in China and accepted as the Dalai Lama, the leader of Lamaism, is due to arrive here today.

Civil and religious ceremonies have been arranged for his reception, and the populace awaits his entry into the city with excited interest.

Two days ago, seated in a saffron-colored carrying chair, the Dalai Lama arrived at a specially prepared halting place 2 miles from Lhasa, accompanied by a military bodyguard and the highest Tibetan officials dressed in gay silks.

After visiting the Rigya monastery, the Dalai Lama was carried to a peacock tent hung with brocade in the center of a large encampment, where British, Nepalese of the Tibetans, presented scarves to him. The Dalai Lama conducted himself with great self-possession as he blessed the stream of officials.

He died Wednesday at Freedmen's Hospital.

A native of Richmond, he took up residence here more than a quarter of a century ago, and was identified with the development of Morning Star Lodge of colored Elks, which conducted a lodge of sorrow Saturday night. Interment will be at Lincoln Memorial Cemetery.

Evangelist to Speak

Dr. H. A. Ironsides, evangelist, and pastor of the Moody Memorial Church, largest Protestant congregation in Chicago, will open a three-day series of lectures at 8 tonight at National Baptist Memorial Church, Sixteenth street and Columbia road northwest.

New York Housing Chairman Assails Straus and Quits

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Accusing Federal Housing Administrator Nathan Straus of "hamstringing" low-cost housing in the city, Chairman Alfred Rheinstein of the New York housing authority announced today he had resigned.

Rheinstein, who is also director of public housing, charged that cancellation of the $6,500,000 Bedford Stuyvesant project in Brooklyn was the result of an article he helped to prepare for a magazine which he said had "piqued" the Federal administrator.

Straus declined to approve the project, which Rheinstein said previously had been given the go-ahead signal, on grounds the land acquisition costs would exceed a $1.50 per square foot limit.

From Cincinnati, Mayor LaGuardia wired tersely: "Resignation accepted."
